THE CO-OPS' GREATEST ENEMY IS IN THEIR OWN CAMP

The Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association has faced a heavy fight this week before Judge Isaac M. Meekins in Federal court at Raleigh. While the fight apparently is a conflict between certain members of the association and some of its officers that is not where the fight really comes from. It is nothing more than a fight to kill a principle that would mean great general prosperity by distributing the products of labor among the masses rather than in the hands of the classes. Much money has been spent, both American and European, to destroy any principle of handling farm products that the farmers might wish to establish.

The main trouble so far is that so few people manufacture tobacco that they found no trouble in discriminating against the farmer that was in the organization, because they could get large quantities outside. They paid good prices for the tobacco outside and poor prices for the tobacco in the organization.

Of course, this tended to dissatisfy the member grower.

One of the main troubles with the association was that it was composed of 90,000 men, and more than half of them were deserters. They betrayed their contracts and failed to fight for their rights. The result was about the same as if half of the soldiers in a charging army were to run to the camps of the enemy. If Washington's army had been too faint-hearted at the battle of Brandywine to suffer bleeding feet, hunger, and other hardships, we today would be without liberty and freedom. If the tobacco grower had stood as manfully as their ancestry, they would have just as surely won. Certainly not without losses and crosses, but victory would have crowned their labors.

Another trouble the tobacco association has encountered was its ignorance. The members did not know the tobacco business beyond the warehouse floor. When it came to carrying the product on to the factory and to the consumer, he was entirely dependent upon somebody else. In getting such help it was necessary to get men who were right from the camps of the enemy, the Big Companies, which naturally always made it easy for our enemies to know our field. Certainly most of these men were honest and true, yet enough were otherwise to do the association irreparable harm. And the association had no show to win in a fight when many of their leaders were more in love with the enemy than with themselves. Men who might be classed as "Cash" traitors.

The man who said the farmer can not organize because he has not got sense enough may yet escape a fool's grave.

SATURDAY "MOURNIN"

By A. B. CHAPIN

its effect would save to the cotton growers many millions every year.

It has always been a mystery to the Southern cotton farmer, both negro and white, why he can't make any money on cotton when he goes into the field at sunrise, plows, hoes, and picks until dark—making from 10 to 14 hours daily—to produce cotton, while a man in a city that never saw a bale of cotton can enter an office at 10 o'clock and get rich before dinner speculating on cotton which he has not seen nor ever will see.

The cotton grower finally has to pay the price of all such speculative fortunes. The grower gets the short side of the deal and the gambler gets the long side.
