Fight Flies and Mosquitoes

Will the folks heed the advice of the county health officer Dr. William E. Warren recently issued a warning against the mosquito and the fly—both of them dangerous pests. Strange to say, they both breed on our own premises. The mosquito has but one birthplace—stagnant water. So you may find him swarming from any old vessel that will catch water. The mosquito carries every case of malaria that man has, as well as several other diseases. The fly breeds in the filthiest places he can find. He carries typhoid, colitis, and hundreds of other diseases. And we often lose our lives by not fighting these enemies of man.

Ignorance and the Law

Ignorance of the law excuses no man, yet ignorance is the basis upon which many crimes are committed. Ignorance is a positive hotbed for crime. The germs of crime are conceived in ignorance and thrive within its narrow, cold, dark confines. A clear demonstration of this fact is shown in our own county. In his confession, made this week, that he killed his own baby a few months ago, Oscar Wynn, who is now in jail here awaiting trial for murder, opened his heart in part. Yet it is clear that he has a very low conception of what he has really done; just enough to know the voice of his conscience, which causes fear to him in a childish way, rather than as a criminal. Wynn is 26 years old, a man of good physical strength, but evidently of low mentality and apparently void of spirituality. However, the want of opportunity—such as the State should give every person—is one of the great troubles in this case. He can neither read nor write, which is not so unusual, but he can not even tell the time of day by a watch or clock; and when shown the face of a watch, he states that no person ever told him how to tell the time or attempted to explain a single thing that would help him to know how to tell the time. It is possible that his parents were opposed to education and schools, too. It is usually just such folks who are against education. At any rate, Wynn says that he was put between the plow handles as soon as he could reach them and was kept there until he was of age; but that neither father, mother, brother, sister, friends or neighbors ever told him how to read, write, or to tell the time of day. Nor did the State ever have a man to go to him in his boyhood and say, "You must go to school, at least enough to know right from wrong." Now, the State has to go to the expense of keeping a man in jail, an officer to prosecute, a judge to hear, and a jury to say whether or not he is guilty of killing his own baby, because he was too ignorant to love, and too ignorant to know and appreciate the better things in life. A part of the crime committed by Oscar Wynn may be properly charged to the neglect of the State, which has no right to permit any child to grow up in such dense ignorance. It may be claimed that Wynn did not have the capacity to learn. In his confession, he takes care to say that he "felt a fit coming on" him, that he rushed toward the bed where the child lay, and that the next thing he knew after that was when he awoke with his arm lying across his baby's neck. Soon after the crime he had the capacity to inquire if the State could hang a man without proving his guilt. So he has, at least, an instinct that leads to self-preservation.

The Rise of the Lowly Cotton Seed

Those wise folks who are constantly kicking science should be willing to let up a little on the scientists who found the value of cottonseed only 50 years ago. Before that time, the legislatures of several States had to pass laws to prohibit throwing cottonseed in streams, where it had become the habit to dump them to get rid of them. Then, for a while, they were thrown out in vast piles at some out-of-the-way places. It was not so long, however, before the scientists had discovered the great value of the cottonseed; the oils, the stock feed, and a few other properties now bring to the South $250,000,000 annually. The little cottonseed ignorantly thrown away has now become the second in importance of the South's manufactured products—all on account of knowing how.
