

Experiment with Cotton Bags for Fertilizer

"Cotton bags used for fertilizer and cotton seed meal this past season proved successful in every particular," Eastern Carolina Chamber of Commerce officials stated Monday after having made a survey of the mills that were induced to try out the cotton bags on a small scale this season. Reports from six mills that used more than 100,000 bags as an experiment, were very encouraging and showed that the cotton bag can be substituted for the jute bag, if the Southern farmer will simply ask that this be done and pay the little cost of using this kind of container. Maxton Oil and Fertilizer company said, "We bought 15,000 bags and found them satisfactory. Our customers were well pleased." W. H. Hasty, secretary-manager, said: "Laurinburg Oil company said, 'We used 10,000 cotton bags for our meal this season and found them, for the most part, satisfactory. But we did find that when meal has to be stacked the cotton bag as made this year will not hold. However, we found them sufficiently satisfactory to continue with them this coming season.'" A. J. McWinnon, Jr., secretary-manager, said: "Chatham Oil and Fertilizer company, Pittsboro, N. C. said, 'We used 10,000 cotton bags for meal and 2,000 for fertilizer this season. Both were very satisfactory.'" E. R. Hinton, manager Planters Cotton Oil company, Rocky Mount, said, "We used a few thousand cotton bags for fertilizer this season and found them satisfactory except that they would get torn around the top when handling. Our customers were well pleased, but not willing to pay the extra cost."

J. L. Morgan, Farmville Oil and Fertilizer company, said, "We used a small quantity of cotton bags for fertilizer and found them entirely satisfactory. The reason we did not use more was that cotton advanced and burlap came down in price."

J. B. Thomas, Hub-Oil and Fertilizer company, Kinston said, "We used 22,000 cotton bags for cotton seed meal this season and all were entirely satisfactory. Our farmers were willing to pay the extra cost of 50 cents per ton to get the cotton bags."

The Eastern Carolina Chamber of Commerce led a campaign last season to get the oil mills to use more cotton bags for fertilizer and received very good results from the experiment.

To Issue D. A. R. Paper This Fall

New Bern, July 21.—Members of the various chapters of the North Carolina Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution are busily engaged this month on advance work for the special publicity-newspaper that will be published during the fall by the society to feature North Carolina history and progress.

The paper will have a wide circulation among many of the 160,000 D. A. R. members, as it will be sent free to every chapter in the world. Each chapter has been asked to furnish a history of the section, a history of the chapter and a sketch of the chapter name. In addition the paper will have a number of stories and advertisements boosting the states.

Miss Jennie Whit Conleton, of Rebersville, and Miss Clem Bridges, of Elm City, were visitors in town Monday.

Mr. T. E. Slade, of Hamilton, accompanied by his son, T. E., Jr., was in town Monday. Mr. Slade is past the 80-years mark, but is cheerful and looks fine and says he enjoys eating and sleeping as well as a boy.

Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Anderson and baby, of Tarboro, spent the week end here with relatives.

Mrs. Mark Ruffin and children, of Tarboro, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Britt at the Britt Hotel.

Mrs. W. C. Manning spent the week end with her daughter, Mrs. S. S. Lawrence in Wilson.

ment. There were other mills that used cotton bags that did not make reports. But in the opinion of the officials of the organization this is sufficient to call the campaign a success.
