

Frigidaire— colder than ice—and never melts

Keeps foods fresh and wholesome
4 to 5 times longer than usual

Due to direct frost-coil cooling, Frigidaire maintains a constant cold-storage temperature in the food compartment—a temperature 12° colder than you ever thought possible. And since Frigidaire operation is entirely automatic, this temperature is maintained constantly, without thought or attention on your part.

This modern, sanitary, care-free refrigeration can be yours so easily. Simply make a small deposit. Then pay a little each month under liberal General Motors terms.

Memorial Coins Given as Prizes

An item of keen interest to farm boys and girls throughout the Southeast Cotton Belt and to every one for that matter in the entire South is the Farm Marketing essay contest being conducted by the Sears Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, Atlanta, Ga. This contest, which offers as its three capital prizes trips to the International Live Stock Show in Chicago and the Southeastern States Fair in Atlanta, offers in addition 1,200 Stone Mountain Memorial coins as secondary prizes. The picture shows Mr. L. H. Beall, general manager at Atlanta, presenting Mr. Hollis N. Randolph, president of the Memorial Association with a check for $1,200 which is given in payment for the souvenirs.

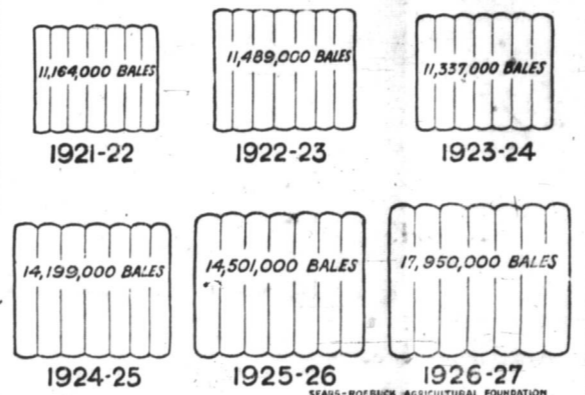

"We are highly pleased," states Mr. Beall, "to be able to cooperate with the association in this matter. Certainly your cause is a most worthy one and we can think of no more suitable prizes for the runners-up in our contest than memorial coins. Building the monument as you are for posterity, it seems fitting to us that the farm youth of today, the agricultural leaders of tomorrow in the Southeast, should be identified with its construction and we consider it a privilege to be a factor in this association."

Miss Mae Gurganus, of Washington, will return home tonight after having visited Miss Grace Whitley several days this week.

Low Prices Spur Cotton Consumption

CONSUMPTION AND EXPORTS OF LINT COTTON BY DROP YEARS

Domestic consumption and exports of cotton in the twelve months ending July 31, 1927, undoubtedly will establish a new high record and will practically equal the record crop produced in 1926, according to the Sears Roebuck Agricultural Foundation.

In the first nine months of the present crop year, domestic mills used 5,337,820 bales, excluding linters, against 4,959,126 bales last year. Exports absorbed 9,473,874 bales, excluding linters, against 6,945,239 bales a year previous. Consumption and exports combined accounted for 14,811,694 bales, against 11,904,365 bales a year ago. If the same percentage of gain is maintained to the end of the crop year, the total will reach 17,999,090 to 18,000,000 bales. The 1926 crop was 15,977,000 bales of lint cotton.

The increase in consumption and exports can be attributed to low prices, showing that the world appreciates a bargain in raw cotton. Foreign consumption of American cotton has not increased as much as exports. Part of the gain was for the purpose of building up stocks abroad. Foreign buyers took advantage of the opportunity to fill their warehouses while cotton was selling below the cost of production. They realized that the chances were strong against three large crops in succession and that cotton was not likely to continue to sell as low as during the past fall and winter. This stored cotton will compare, of course, with this year's production.

Besides the large domestic consumption and exports in recent months, the cotton situation has been strengthened by other events. Low prices prevented much of the 1926 crop from being picked so that only 17,911,000 bales were ginned compared with the estimated production of 18,618,000 bales. Crops in other cotton-producing countries proved to be enough smaller than in 1925 to offset much of the gain in the domestic crop. The total world crop was not much greater than in 1925. Floods destroyed some stored cotton and forced a substantial cut in acreage. Drouth in Texas and heavy weevil emergence are other indications that production is unlikely to be excessive again this year.

BENTHALL PICKER OWNERS:

Take notice. I will rebuild your old peanut pickers from the trucks up and guarantee them to do the same work that a new one will do. See me at once, as I can only overhaul a limited number, and if you wait until later in the season, you will be disappointed. J. S. Whitley, Prop., Williamston Supply Co. a2 6t
