

STATE COLLEGE JUDGING TEAM AGAIN IS FIRST

Wins National Honors for Third Time at Chicago Livestock Show

Raleigh, Dec. 2—Again, for the third time, the crops judging team from State College has won first honors in the inter-collegiate crops-judging contest at the International Livestock and Grain Exposition at Chicago.

This team, of three students from the farm crops department won first place in the general contest, first place in speed judging, first place in the judging of market grades, and third place in identifying all farm plants and seeds.

Individuals on the team also won high honors: with M. O. Pleasants taking second rank among all competitors, J. C. Tomlinson taking fourth place, and C. W. Jackson taking sixth place.

This team was trained and coached by Prof. W. H. Darst, head of the farm crops department. The boys were selected by a process of elimination, and the four men carried to Chicago were said to be some of the best judges of farm crops to be trained at the college in several years.

This is the third time during the five years of this national contest that the State College teams have won first place. In addition, members of the team have covered themselves with great individual glory. Though the team did not win first in 1926, W. L. Adams, one of the members, made the highest individual score ever recorded in the four years of competition. W. H. Rankin also won first place as an individual in 1923, and J. E. Foster in 1925.

The high scores made by State College representatives in this international event has turned the eyes of the nation to this State as an educational center in agricultural courses. There were 16 colleges and universities entered in the competition this year, with most of them being located in the great crop and grain sections of the mid-west.

Do You Use Attachments Of Your Sewing Machine

Do you get as much use as possible out of your sewing machine attachments? Practically 90 per cent of all women replying to a questionnaire on sewing machine attachments, but about 40 per cent failed to answer the question on attachments, which might signify that a large number of these women did not use them. The hemmer was most used by those who replied in the affirmative.

Feeding The Dairy Cow During Winter Months

The dairy cow's feed requirements can best be supplied in winter by means of hay, silage, roots, and grain. Properly cured legume hays, such as alfalfa, clover, vetches, soy beans, and cowpeas, are well suited for feeding to dairy cows, as they are high in both protein and assimilable minerals and they are also very palatable. Silage and toryed-crop supply succulent roughage feeds during the perage and toryed-crop supply succulent when no green grass is available. They are of special value in keeping the cow's digestive system in good working order and in stimulating the milk flow. Corn, oats, barley, and kafir are examples of farm-grown grains commonly used for feeding dairy cows. All of these grains should be ground before feeding.

Hog Cholera Control Is Now On Practical Basis

Hog cholera is still a persistent and annoying disease, but its control is on a practical basis. The increasing use of concentrated, clear serum promises to be an important help in controlling the disease. In addition to its other desirable qualities, clear serum keeps for about three years, as compared with two years for the ordinary whole-blood serum, which is an advantage in storing the product for use in emergency outbreaks.
