

SWIMS 40 TIMES ACROSS RIVER

Timbo Jeffress, of Kinston, Proves He's Not Afraid Of Roanoke Current

Last week when the Boy Scouts broke camp at Cam Leach, near Bath, Timbo Jeffress, 15-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Jeffress, of Kinston, received a cordial invitation from his cousin, Cuth Hassell, to visit him in Williamston.

Timbo had often heard his mother speak of Williamston, and he was eager to visit the scenes and meet some of the people his mother had known and of whom he had so often heard her speak.

Timbo was delighted when he received the maternal permission to accompany Cuth home, but, lo, one thing—he must avoid that dangerous and treacherous Roanoke River. Look at it from afar, from the old hill a mile away, or from the top of the tall old sycamore, but never go near or enter its dangerous and treacherous bosom.

To warn and caution a youth against a thing is almost equal to urging him to embrace it. When the boy reached here, the only thing of interest to him was the river. He went down and looked it over, and in his breast, there came a desire to conquer that stream.

It was once considered a feat to swim across to the Bertie side, and few reckless souls did it. It was not because the river was so wide, being only about 100 yards, but the swiftness of the current and the whirlpools were what made it a dangerous and difficult undertaking.

The mighty Roanoke, whose treacherous waters had engulfed so many persons when Timbo's mother was a child and for which she felt a fear and dread, possessed no dangers to the clear-eyed Timbo. He climbed the highest pile at the wharf, and with a double somersault plunged into the stream and headed direct for the other side. He swam across once without touching shore, twice without touching shore, and so on until he had made the trip 20 times to the Bertie side, thus swimming the mighty Roanoke 40 times without stopping or touching bottom.

Timbo came ashore laughing derisively at the treacherous Roanoke and singing a song saying how easy it was. Timbo continues to improve in his swimming, it will not be many years before he can compete in the elimination marathon contests for aquatic laurels.

Reed To Confer With Smith About Campaign

Senator James A. Reed left his home in Missouri yesterday for Albany, where he with Senator Robinson, vice presidential nominee, will discuss with Governor Al Smith the Democratic campaign. It is expected that a chair-

THE PLEASURE TRAIL

By GEO. R. SINGLETON
(All copy rights, late nights and all nights reserved)

There is a long dirt road winding, with dust and grime galore, But a great reward awaits you on Pamlico's golden shore, Just a shack as compared with a mansion, is good old Pamlico Inn But it's there you cast off your troubles and your pleasure really begins.

If it's late at the time of arrival and the lights are all burning low Just shout right out loud for old Ollie, a boy you'll just love to know.

Your comfort is his work and his pleasure and he'll do his very best To see that you have a comfortable bed and in the morning just as anxious to see you fed.

When vacation days are calling you away from the city's grind Just turn the old wheel of your automobile to Pamlico and have a darn good time.

Maybe not so much to look at and not the most modern place in the world, But for pleasure and rest, you'll find it the best of any old spot in the world.

Just address your letter to Ollie if a reservation you desire, It's so far away it just wouldn't pay to spend your money to wire.

Plan Larger Bridge Across Pasquotank

According to an announcement sent out by Henry C. Jewett, lieutenant colonel, Corps of Engineers, the North Carolina State Highway Commission is anticipating the construction of a larger bridge across the Pasquotank River, at Elizabeth City.

The State commission has entered an application for approval by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War of plans of a highway bridge proposed to be constructed across the river at the foot of Burgess Street. A public hearing will be held in the chamber of commerce rooms in Elizabeth City next Thursday morning at 11 o'clock.

The new bridge, it is understood, will replace a one-way structure now in use. The bridge is on one of the main routes from here to Norfolk.

Get rid of that low-producing hen now. Cull the flock and sell or eat all hens that do not lay more than half the time. Those early hatched pullets that are not showing up well can also be gotten rid of at this time.
