On Tuesday morning, from 10:30 to 1 o'clock, Mrs. A. R. Dunning entertained about forty of her friends with a bridge luncheon.

Her handsome home was decorated for the occasion with bowls of golden glow and pink roses. The tables were arranged in the living room, music room and dining room thrown en suite. On Wednesday morning at the same hour, Mrs. Dunning had another luncheon with tables arranged for 36 more guests.

At 1 o'clock the hostess, assisted by Miss Ruth Manning, Mrs. Oscar Anderson, and Mrs. Elbert Peel, served a salad course, consisting of chicken salad, sandwiches, potato chips, celery, pickles, and wafers, and iced tea. This was followed by fruit and mints. The parties were two of the most successful of the season, Mrs. Dunning being one of the hospitable hostesses of Williamston.

RAISING BEEF CATTLE URGED

Cattle Specialist Says East Could Raise Cattle Profitably

No other section can produce good quality beef cattle more economically than the South, and North Carolina, in particular, for the reason that lands are still cheap, grazing is good, the pasture season is long, feed is produced at low cost and not much shelter is required. "For these reasons we can start in the cattle business in this State with less capital than any other section," says Fred M. Haig, animal husbandry worker at State College. "Out of the 25,000,000 acres of farm land in North Carolina, six million are being cultivated. This includes all of our pasture and hay land and thus there must be plenty of land left for grazing. Most of the 161,000 head of beef cattle now in the State are found in the western part, where the land is rough and grass grows readily. Still the eastern portion also offers possibilities to the man who may grow his beef as a side line to crop farming."

Prof. Haig finds that many crop farmers of the east are already turning to dairying with success, and he believes that the raising of a few beef animals would add to the income. The small amount of labor required would come in the fall after crop work is over. Feeding beef cattle works along well with hog growing and the manure secured will add to the fertility of the land.
