Major E.E. Aldrin in spectacular flight from Turin to Paris demonstrates endurance of "Standard" Motor Oil

It was blazing hot in Turin when Major Aldrin gave his Lockheed Vega Monoplane the gun. Off like a rocket!

Straight into the heart of a raging blizzard he flew when he reached the Alps. Then up 15,000 feet to escape it. Colder yet. But the big Wasp motor never missed a beat all the way to Paris.

The flight was made with "Standard" Motor Oil, preferred by Major Aldrin because on previous flights in America he had always used it and never found it wanting.

The same reliability that stood by Major Aldrin when his plane flew at 15,000 feet, is inherent in every gallon of "Standard" Motor Oil that goes into your automobile. Used with "Standard" Gasoline or ESSO, you have an unbeatable combination.
