When Business Goes Into the Classified

"For sale, cheap, a good business . . . somebody sweat blood . . . somebody wore patched clothes . . . to make it a good business . . ."

AFTER years of sacrifice, the man who built a business can say: "It is a good business. It will take care of us the rest of our lives."

About that time comes Death—then it is a good thing that the man who built the business doesn't see what happens.

As a rule, creditors almost smash it trying to get their money. Incompetent administrators take another smash—then the business is dumped on the market. Why?

Because Death pulled away the man whose brain and devotion built the business.

The greatest asset a business has—the brains of the man who built it, is worth covering with Life Insurance.
