Things We Need and Things We Want

We should learn the importance of recognizing the difference between the things we need and the things we do not need, and how dangerous it is to have things we do not need. A boy wants a razor before he needs it; a girl wants a watch before she can tell the time of day. If they get what they want, they are subject to hurt themselves and destroy the property.

The childish desire for things we do not need does not stop with children; it goes on through middle and even to old age. We have given so much of our time, thought and energy in an effort to secure things we really did not need that the practice hurts us. The result has been a weakening of us either physically, mentally or morally. Some are facing bankruptcy. The health of others has been impaired. The morals of still others may have been weakened, and it is certain that the we have wasted much time, all because we sought so many things that we did not need. A reform along this line will help us to work our way to a better position in life. And we must leave off many of the things we do not need if we are to succeed.

The Hungry Stranger

What shall we do with the hungry passerby is one of the major problems facing the country. We are rapidly coming to the place when we must give this question more thought than we have ever given it before. Many thousands of people, ground down by poverty, are going from one community to another hoping to find work in the change, and in virtually every case their sad lives are enshrouded in deeper gloom by the words, "No place for you."

There was a time, in fact, it has always been that the few unfortunates, the weaklings and the unfruitful ones could be easily taken care of. That condition has been overcome and the great army of needy souls is on the march, unable to find work and take care of itself.

The real danger in this crisis lurks in the possibility of closing our hearts and consciences to the appeals of the needy and hungry ones. Some of the number are unworthy, of course, but some and most of them are deserving of every consideration possible. They, with as clean hearts and souls as we possess, and who through desperate circumstances have been reduced to poverty with their bodies emaciated and shrunken for the want of food, must be considered. With the factory jobs gone, and the world markets closed, their jobs will return no more to those people making up the vast army of unemployed humans. Their only chance now is centered around the last fight, a fight for food to save life.

Now is the day for politicians, newspapers, preachers and teachers to tell the people the whole truth, but not to frighten them in giving the solemn warning of the task that will be theirs in saving life. Relief can only be found in the land, where the unemployed can seed and cultivate the earth for their livelihood. And they need not expect their food and raiment to spring forth in the future from the over-crowded factories, and neither can they expect their livelihood to grow in the paved side walks of the cities and towns.

While this process of readjustment is in formation, the only hope for the millions rests in charitable hearts and if charity fails them they starve.

Nature Thought of Everything

Nature thought of everything when the human body was made. When the body is about to become ill, nature planned danger signals to warn us. Thus, if our children grind their teeth when they sleep, or lack appetite, or suffer from abdominal pains, or itch about the nose and fingers, we should know that they may have contracted worms. Then, if we are wise, we buy a bottle of White's Cream Vermifuge and safely and surely expel the worms. Thus we avoid the danger of very serious trouble. White's Cream Vermifuge costs only 35c a bottle, and can be bought from

Redeem the Home

What would John Howard Payne write about now if he were living?

In his day, he had the inspiration of the greatest subject and the finest sentiment that ever moved man, and so it was easy then for him to write "Home, Sweet Home." But now things are different. We no longer use home as a place of peace and joy. We use it as a kind of station where we can yawn, mutter, and grumble about the short-comings of our neighbors, a place where we may curse our enemies. We find that home bores the children; they want to gallop away in the early morning and enjoy this new destructive freedom that takes the place of and removes every vestige of obedience, love and respect the child once had for the home. And then there are the mothers and wives who run around seeking the fancy functions of their modern and dangerous society.

One of the greatest needs in this town, county, state and union is to redeem the home, not so much from the mortgages as to its proper place in the minds and hearts of the men, women and children. This one thing would lower our prison population, limit the cases of shame and tragedy, our suicides, our divorces, our scandals would be reduced 50 per cent in number.

We may never be able to retrieve the home and bring it back to where it rightfully belongs. However, we need not expect to get many of the most valuable lessons in life in any other place but at home. When we fail there, we will have a civilization resting on a much lower plane than it should be.

If John Howard Payne should come to earth now, he might write a poem of sorrow and gloom over the loss to some home of its sweetest flower, a girl or a boy.

Plenty of News

News is the same, according to the statement of the average man, which is nearly always untrue. It may be so that to many people there is no news, yet to the man or woman who sees and thinks, there is always news. The good, quiet times, which give us our greatest peace and deepest joy, is good news, although we do not count it, and only pay attention to the sensational, such as scandals, tragic deaths, and like things as news.

Poultry on Every Farm

Mr. G. A. Cardwell, agricultural agent for the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, advises the raising of chickens for winter shipment to the north. He says the supply of cold storage poultry and eggs is smaller than usual and this should hold the poultry market up through the season.

Poultry is one thing that every farmer should produce. There is always enough waste around a farm to carry a reasonable number of chickens without a great extra feed cost. A small range of green feed not only takes care of a flock large enough to supply the family with eggs and chickens, but it guarantees a sure cash income.

With plenty of chickens on the lot, it makes little difference if the meat and butter are out; chicken and eggs will take their place.

High Cost of Living Not All

The high cost of living has been the cause for much talk in this county during the past few years, and the talk has been justified, no doubt. However, the expense of living is not the only high cost that humanity has to face. It costs a lot to be born and die. In fact, it costs as much to come into the world and go out as it cost in years past to stay here half a century.

The cradle and the coffin will consume the fortune of half of the average person. Doubtless these items of high cost have come from the stylish demand of the age in which we are living. Style is a fine thing but when we consider the fact that our birth mortality is much higher than in many countries with far less enlightenment than our own, we wonder if our American styles are not responsible for the deaths of many mothers and children.

We are extremists; hence we make things high needlessly.

A Moral Nose Dive

Florida has taken a moral nose dive. She has just passed a gambling law similar to the three proposed bills killed by our last legislature. There is still ground to sing "The Good Old North State."

Gambling is dishonest in toto and when any state or person lets down the bar to their soul and allows the practice to take root in their heart, they will find a crop of crime springing up in their midst. When a state sells its sacred rights to gamblers, no matter how high the price, it is cheated.

Deserves Sympathy and Censure

Germany says she is just not able to pay her debts. That proves that Germany is not unlike other people and countries. Still, we can't help feeling that Germany is the main cause of so many debts, as well as for 10,000,000 or more deaths. While we sympathize with Germany, we confess our sympathy is mingled with censure.

Mellon and Meat

Some have meat and cannot eat,
And some have not and want it;
We must eat meat despite the heat.
Or the packers will not like it.

In the future the Secretary of the Treasury will not permit the United States Public Health Service to give the public any health advice which threatens the profits of the packing industry.

The packers protested when the Health Service issued a bulletin recently suggesting that less meat should be eaten during the warm summer months. The Secretary has now issued an order that hereafter all bulletins must be submitted for his scrutiny before going to the public. Censorship will do the rest.

Many sacrifices have been asked of us during the depression, but up to this time no one had suggested that we sacrifice health—or our notions of health—on the altar of sales. It seems a rather large sacrifice to make.

Apparently we've got to chew our way out of this mess we're in, let the digestive apparatus groan as it may.

Meanwhile we have a suggestion to make to Mr. Mellon. It is that he contribute to the welfare of the packing industry by recommending revised taxes which will fall less heavily on the man of moderate means. New York World Telegram.

Don't Rasp Your Throat With Harsh Irritants

"Reach for a LUCKY instead"

Eve started it and the daughters of Eve inherited it. Eve gave Adam the apple, and it seems that Adam must have passed it on. For every man and every woman has an Adam's Apple. Put your finger on your Adam's Apple—that is your larynx, your voice box—it contains your vocal chords. Consider your Adam's Apple—when you do so, you are considering your throat—your vocal chords. Don't rasp your throat with harsh irritants. Reach for a LUCKY instead. Here in America LUCKY STRIKE is the only cigarette which brings you the added benefit of the exclusive "TOASTING" Process, which includes the use of modern Ultra Violet Rays. It is this exclusive process that expels certain harsh irritants present in all raw tobaccos. These expelled irritants are sold to manufacturers of chemical compounds. They are not present in your LUCKY STRIKE. And so we say "Consider your Adam's Apple."
