EIGHTY PERCENT STATE FARMS ARE MORTGAGE FREE

Agriculture in North Carolina is still a billionaire and even a billionaire may wear a black eye but black eyes have a way of disappearing.

Thus did Wheeler McMillen, associate editor of Country Home, summarize the agricultural situation in the United States and bring his summary to fit North Carolina, in an address last week before the 29th annual session of the State Farmers' Convention. Eighty percent of the farms in this State operated by their owners are mortgage-free and agriculture is still solvent.

Mr. McMillen said that the condition of agriculture was not so bad as it might be and he held out a rather hopeful outlook for the future. He did say that this period of depression would have the effect of forcing the incapable man out of the game but would leave the alert, business-like farmer on firm ground. Land taxes must be reduced, however, for the farms are still carrying too heavy a tax burden in comparison with the income from them.

In this speech, Mr. McMillen indirectly took issue with Senator J. W. Bailey who declared agriculture to be prostrate in his address on the opening day of the convention. Mr. Bailey said the national government must devote its energies during the next 65 years to giving the farm the same attention it had commerce and industry during the past 65 years. With 33 million persons having a low buying power, the Nation cannot revive until these persons are revived.

President H. G. Ashcraft sounded a more optimistic note in his address when he declared his faith in the future of farming and said lowered production and better business will come to the aid of farming the future. "I am sold on agriculture," declared the president, as he asked the 1,000 delegates to strive for a better rural life.

THROUGH INSURANCE

A very rich man once said: "Unless I teach my son to save I feel that I have been a failure as a father." Every child, rich or poor, should learn to save through insurance. It may be the means of an education, the successful beginning of life or protection against early reverses in life. Begin with a small policy early in life and increase your insurance as your income will permit.

Don't Neglect Your HOGS!

Many of the better farm journals are writing very optimistically concerning the price of both live and dressed pork, and we feel that with their vast source of information that they are in a position to give sound advice that should be thought of seriously. Is there any money crop better than good hogs?

Hogs Will Not Thrive on CORN ALONE

And we are prepared to furnish the difference at very reasonable prices. Give us a chance to figure with you on your needs in feeds. We will save you money.

Worm Your Hogs Thoroughly for Best Results

LET US TELL YOU HOW

Lindsley Ice Co.

A Certain Farmer---

... wanted to buy a tract of land adjoining his property. He had offered a fancy price, but the owner refused to sell.

Some time later this piece of property was sold at the county courthouse door to satisfy a mortgage. The notice of sale was advertised through the local newspaper, according to law, but this certain farmer was not a subscriber to his county paper—and he knew nothing of the sale until after the property had been acquired by another party, at a bargain price.

It may prove costly to be without your county paper—you should read it regularly—it is a personal and direct benefactor in many instances. Besides, it is a mighty factor in promoting the industrial, religious, educational and civic progress of your community—which is an indirect and mutual benefit to all.
