Help a Good Cause

The Red Cross Roll Call should appeal to every person because of the good it has done to humanity throughout the world. Yet all the society has done has been made possible by the small donations from generous people. When we have earthquakes, tidal waves, volcano eruptions, storms, pestilences, war, or any other calamity in any part of the world, the man who answers the roll call with his one dollar is there to help, because there is where it goes—to help the suffering and distressed.

This year the roll call campaign will begin on November 11, Armistice Day. Every person who wants to do a good deed on that day will have the chance by dropping one dollar in the Red Cross Treasury.

Remember, it goes to help those who need.

Bad News and More Bad News

There seems to be lots more bad news than there is good.

Big head lines about men killing their wives and wives killing their husbands' lady friends, and husbands killing their wives' men friends, men suing their wives' lovers and wives poisoning their husbands to clear the way for younger lovers are numerous in all the papers these days. And then to add to the bad news there are gangsters shooting up towns, killing men, women and children. All that with the rabble riding rough-shod through the land killing their friends and themselves, and the robbing, stealing, lying and hundreds of other crimes certainly does make a lot of bad news.

On the other hand, the folks have almost stopped talking about the better things in life. You hardly hear the word prayer. The name of the Lord is seldom heard except by some vane curser who knows not the Lord. Of course there isn't much said about the church unless a preacher goes wrong, and then the Devil shouts. We talk more about the Judases than all the other apostles. We talk more about the girl who falls than we do about the one that rises. In fact, our minds seem inclined toward the bad. Our taste and desire for the good are very weak.

More of the good needs to be taught in the homes, the schools, the highways and even at the semi-gambling card games. Decent persons should remember how ugly it is to curse and swear. What we need to do is follow the admonition of the wise man, Solomon, who said, "Remember Thy Creator in the days of thy youth."

Good-Bye To Capone

It is to be hoped that the notorious bootlegger, gangster, and all-round crook recently convicted in the Federal court at Chicago will soon be shut behind the walls of Leavenworth prison, and that his name will disappear from the front page of the newspapers for many years to come. Because he was reputed to be at the head of a gang of scoundrels who have committed every crime from murder down, and because he is supposed to have amassed a million or so dollars, this Italian ex-barkeeper has had a vast amount of publicity. Of course, the public was considerably interested in the man, and he made good copy, especially for newspapers that make a specialty of sensational news, but we believe most folks have had enough of him. The Federal officers who finally put him where he belongs deserve the thanks of all decent people.—Beaufort News.

Nights Were Made for Sleeping

Will Rogers says he sent his two boys off to school because he was so tired of trying to get them up every morning—which indicates that everybody has trouble. Yet it would be so easy if folks could only learn which end of the night to use for sleep. We might get a good lesson from the lower animals and fowls. They always wind up their day's work in time for a full night's rest, and are out early in the morning to get plenty of good food, and have a whole day to eat and play.

Of course, if these animals and fowls were to prowl around as late at night and sleep as late mornings as boys and girls do, they would all be destroyed at night or starve to death the next day.

Will is right in sending the boys off where they will be made to get up. That is the only good thing about the Army—it does make the boys get up early.

A Caste Law

How popular is the game law, and how often is it violated? This, like many other questions, of course can not be accurately answered.

However, it seems to be one of the most hated laws that we now have. It has practically stopped the poor man from the privileges and the pleasures of either hunting or fishing. It has put all those privileges in the hands of the wealthy sportsmen. The poor man neither has land to hunt on nor money to buy licenses.

Of course, it may be better for the poor, because there is no pay in hunting. On the other hand, the law certainly does classify the rich on one side and the poor on the other.

One sportsman has recently complained that the last legislature thought more of corn than it did the squirrels, and, too, in a rather critical manner. Of course the legislature needs to protect both. However it is a dangerous thing to permit sportsmen to dictate the laws governing our natural resources.

It has been said that the people hate the liquor law more than any other, which is incorrect. To begin with, men admit it is wrong to manufacture and handle whisky, and few people will stoop to do it. But when it comes to the game law, the average man can not understand why he can not go out on his neighbor's hedgerows, with his permission, and shoot a few crows, sparrows, and quail; and if a fox catches a goose or a hen, most of us feel we should have the right to shoot the fox in or out of season, with or without license. As things now stand, very few people can hunt unless they are in the upper class.

"Whoopee" On the Wane

Those blessed optimists who make it a practice to find good in all things met tough digging in some parts of the country during the past winter. The great depression was advertised in most of the papers with as many adjectives as the circus publicity man yanks out the dictionary. The optimist, however, found reasons to prove that we were on the upward climb, although it might be difficult to see at the time.

Perhaps one of the good things that has come to us is a new spirit of earnestness and sincerity in our lives. The war-time prosperity was followed such an orgy of extravagant living that it was necessary to coin the word "whoopee" to describe it. This life produced new birds, the "whoopee-er" and the "whoopee-ess." To them, days were things to be burned on the altar of license. The fact that in dancing around this funeral pyre they might become very badly scorched themselves never seemed to matter. Perhaps the cold waters of depression were needed to extinguish the fires of "whoopee." Perhaps they were needed to let these pathetic fools—and there were millions of them—yes, millions—learn that "whoopee" wasn't really having a good time at all.

Certain it is that people are now giving much more serious attention to the worth-while things of life. Serious books, meritorious plays, and good music are rapidly coming in for their own. Many misguided people are beginning to find that they need their heads as well as their feet and appetites. They are learning that the things that we enjoy the most are the things that we build with our own brains and bodies, for the happiness of ourselves and others. One society "whoopee-ess," a child of wealthy parents of high standing in an eastern community recently said as she was entering the lock-up after a will party that had resulted in a fatal automobile accident, "I wanted to have a pleasant evening at home, with music and games, but he insisted upon going out, and I couldn't stop his drinking." Just think what a little music might have saved that night!

If the depression struck a few death blows to "whoopee" it did a good job. A hilariously good time is a very different thing from its counterfeit, "whoopee."—Elyde.

Laws Passed for Public Safety

From Shelby comes the report that a state highway patrolman advised a man driving a mule to a cart on a public road at night that he ought to place a light on either the mule or the vehicle, for his own protection and the safety of the animal, as well as for the safety of all who passed that way on motor vehicles. The driver of the mule declined to take the precaution suggested, with the result that a car struck the outfit the same night, killed the mule, and the driver was taken to a hospital seriously injured.

There is a law in this state which provides that vehicles drawn by team and traveling the highways at night carry a light. Many who find it necessary to thus travel at night fail to comply with the law and even condemn it, offering criticism for those whose duty it is to enforce the law. They apparently fail to appreciate a law which was passed for the protection of life, their own life, and that of others. It is another case of ignoring one's own safety and at the same time the safety of others.

There are other laws, passed for the safety of individuals, which frequently are violated. Take, for instance, the law against fast and reckless driving, as well as that which requires proper lighting of motor vehicles. Failure to comply with these laws on the part of motorists result in many casualties. And yet folks are prone to complain when an officer "pulls" them for doing things prohibited by law, and which not only places their own life in jeopardy, but the lives of others.—Sampson Independent.

Restoring Confidence

Business should improve, with the apparent united fight the bankers of the country are making to help conditions. The old story, want of confidence, should be ruled out, and confidence restored.

Much of the trouble today has come because folks were afraid of the banks, and the banks were afraid of the folks. Just as soon as the people begin to help each other, we will see better times.

GARDEN NOTES FOR NOVEMBER

The Successful Storage of Vegetables Calls For Certain Requirements

By Miss LORA E. SLEEPER (County Home Demonstration Agent)

Successful vegetable storage demands a knowledge of the storage requirements of the different crops. Some crops keep best at temperatures only slightly above freezing, while others require moderately warm surroundings. Vegetables also differ as to moisture requirements. One group may keep best in an atmosphere of moderate humidity, while another group requires that the air be fairly dry. The following classification will help in determining just how to store the different crops:

1. Warm Temperature and Moderately Dry Atmosphere.—Sweet potatoes, pumpkins, and winter squashes. A storage temperature of 50 to 55 degrees will prove best. These conditions are best obtained in a standard sweet potato storage house. Put in the pumpkins and squashes after the sweet potato curing period is over.

2. Cool Temperature and Moderate Humidity.—Cabbage, collards, beets, carrots, parsnips, salsify, turnips, and Irish potatoes. Practically all of these crops keep well in common forms of storage such as pits, hills, or cellars. A temperature only slightly above freezing (35 to 40 degrees) is satisfactory for this group. Proper ventilation is important. The atmosphere should be moist enough to prevent shriveling but dry enough to prevent the development of rots.

In most parts of the state cabbage and collards may be kept in the field where grown with only slight protection. Many gardeners keep both crops by pushing the plants over to the ground and covering the stems and the lower part of the heads with soil.

Parsnips and salsify are quite hardy, so may be left in the field where they are grown. Beets, carrots, and Irish potatoes may be kept in hills, dug outs, or cellars. A cool, dark cellar with a dirt floor is a good place for these crops. If outdoor storage is necessary, barrels make satisfactory receptacles. Place the barrels horizontally, partially sunk in the ground if a well-drained location is available. Such a multiple-barrel pit offers a convenient means of storage, since the vegetables are stored in relatively small units and may be removed a barrel at a time.

3. Cool Temperature and Dry Atmosphere.—The onion is the principal crop coming under this classification. Onions usually keep best if stored in slatted crates in order to provide better ventilation. Keep the temperature just above freezing and the air dry. Small quantities may be kept conveniently by tying in bunches and suspending from the ceiling of a cellar or good outhouse.

The 30-acre reservoir at Sangerhausen, Germany, contains more than 350,000 rose bushes, comprising 9,000 varieties.

FAIR NEXT WEEK AT WASHINGTON

Many Martin County People To Attend Annual Event in Beaufort

The Beaufort County Agricultural Fair, sponsored by the American Legion of that county, will begin November 9th and will continue through Saturday night, November 14th, making six full days and nights.

Two of the three acts booked for the fair have already arrived in Washington and are encamped on the fair grounds preparing themselves for the opening next Monday, it was announced today by Frank Millar, secretary on the famous "Whirl of Death" act of the fair association.

One of these is the man who puts He enters a revolving cylinder on a motorcycle and rides around it at break-neck speed for a certain allotment of time. This is one of the most spectacular acts to ever be put on at Washington.

Among the other features booked is an act of trained billy goats, dogs, and other animals. This attraction was secured by the fair association after much effort, and is expected to be a favorite among the children. It was brought here especially for them and will be put on early each night so they may see it before retiring.

It was unable to secure the balloonist aerialist the fair association has announced, but two aerial acts have been secured. One is the Gordon Troupe and the other is the Duvall act.

THIS WOMAN LOST 64 POUNDS OF FAT

Mrs. H. Price of Woodside, L. I., writes: "A year ago I weighed 190 pounds. I started to take Kruschen and now I weigh 126 and never felt better in my life and what's more, I look more like 20 years old than the mother of 2 children, one 19 and the other 18. Everyone of my friends say it's marvelous the way I reduced."

To lose fat with speed—take a half-teaspoonful of Kruschen in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning—don't miss a morning—an 85 cent bottle lasts 4 weeks—get it at any drug store in America. If not joyfully satisfied after the first bottle—money back.
