The Fun Begins

The fun has commenced. That is, the street corners, back alleys, and broadways are now ringing and reverberating with baseball chat. Lots of folks who do not know much of anything else are giving the scientific explanation of baseball. They are telling about all kinds of curves and how to swing bats and the name of every player. Some of them can actually tell the name of every player and his batting average for the past 17 years.

It is certainly a fine thing for those who have nothing else to think about or talk about to just lounge around a whole summer and talk about baseball, and especially if they happen to win a nickel bet on some batter or some particular league.

Yes, the fun is on; they are already talking and gambling about the winner.

Disgraceful and Humiliating Dances

It is a little humiliating to hear so much about drinks and fights at Williamston dances.

It is said these dances are drawing many bootleggers from miles away—a type of people that good girls should be kept away from. And then, too, they say that some questionable women are coming to these events. The mothers of the community will do well to keep their boys from the company of such cattle.

It is hard enough in this modern age to take care of the youngsters, without opening up the gates and inviting in the scum of the earth to sow their seed of death, hell and destruction broadcast into our midst, leaving us to grope in shame, sin, and misery. Beware of the fellow who says there is no harm, and never say that youth has to sow its wild oats. Both statements are false.

A Sad Scene

One of the sad scenes of the week is the trial of a young lady of good position and her father, a judge of the state courts, going on trial in the criminal courts—the daughter charged with embezzling a considerable sum of money from the State, the father charged with hiding the crime by altering and destroying records.

We seem to be passing through a cycle of life when people disregard honesty and truth. The urge for wealth, ease, and society was so strong with this young lady that she rushed across all lines of restraint and reason, and, according to her plea, took money that was not her own.

The judge was under the pressure of grief when he committed his crime, by his own admission. But he made a mistake in trying to hide a crime. Doubtless he made his greatest mistake years ago when he failed to teach his daughter "thou shalt not steal."

Too many homes are stressing the pleasant side of life and leaving off the important matters of teaching honesty, truth, industry, humbleness to their children.

The daughter is accused of stealing, the father—a judge—of lying and making records lie.

Smith's Ingratitude

The Democratic party cut its own throat when it nominated Al Smith for the presidency in 1928, and it now looks like Al wants to cut the party's throat in the coming campaign. A spirit of deep ingratitude. Can it be that Raskob, the Radical, is still trying to boss the Democratic party?

Foolish Expenditures

Are folks still throwing their money away foolishly? It seems that some are.

It would appear that the force of the lesson that we have had thrust before us would teach us to know better. However, we refuse to deny ourselves the pleasures and are still maintaining and sustaining the people who furnish the luxuries just as we have done for the past 15 years.

We have heavy taxes, and they need to be lowered, but we need not charge too much of our troubles to taxes. If we had spent all of our money as wisely as we have our tax money, we would have more to show for it than we now have.

We will not find prosperity until we shift from a policy of wastefulness to a policy of rigid economy. While we can not avoid taxes, we can stop many of our wasteful expenditures here and there.

The Bonus Bill

The bonus bill is about to cause a bust in the ranks of its advocates. The leaders are against it generally, while the rank and file are for it.

If the Government can pay off with a special issue of new money, it will be a fine thing to pay off. On the other hand, if the government has to go out and borrow money from sharks that already are sapping us to death with interest, then it will be very unwise and should not be done.

A Valuable Factory

Whoever owns a cow owns one of the most economical manufacturing plants known to either science or industry. And the beauty about this manufacturing plant is that any farmer can own one, as well as grow the raw materials it uses. The farmer who does not have a good cow is as badly off as the farmer who has to go to the store to buy his axehandles and singletrees.—Upton G. Wilson, Winston-Salem Journal

Salary Reduction Not Popular

Beaufort News.

So far it appears that only one representative in Congress from North Carolina has indicated a willingness to have his salary reduced. We refer to the Honorable Edward W. Poir, who represents the fourth district and has been a member of Congress for a long time. When Mr. Poir first became a member he drew a salary of $5,000 a year, later this was advanced to $7,500 and then to $10,000. Of course, there are also liberal allowances for traveling expenses and clerical help. The increase to $10,000 was predicated on the high cost of living in Washington and elsewhere.

If the salaries of members of Congress and all Federal officeholders and employees remain unchanged, this amounts to an increase, because living expenses have certainly decreased very materially. It appears however that Congressmen do not regard this fact as a sufficient reason for a reduction. Some of them talk about what they could make at home; the member from the third district stated that he was a $20,000 a year man before he went to Congress.

With but two exceptions, the members of Congress from North Carolina, Senators and Representatives, are lawyers. They are no doubt quite willing to accept fees right now if they are big enough. They do some practice in vacation time and sometimes they do not mind leaving Washington when Congress is in session if the inducements are sufficiently interesting. It is hard to believe that many Congressmen are holding their jobs at a sacrifice to themselves. If so, there are plenty others ready to take their places.

Food For Thought

The Watauga Democrat.

The downcast eye, the solemn stare, the guttural murmurings, the perplexed glances, the whispered curses . . . all tell us that times are hard. To walk along Main Street on Monday morning one would think that the end of time is not far distant. You meet one man who is the father of two charming children, each of which bears great promise for the future. His table fairly groans beneath the weight of three elegant meals daily. His home is paid for. He has a large circle of friends who stand by him "through thick and thin," his health is good, his taxes are paid, he has no enemies. But the gentleman curses his luck, and vows that the world has gone to the dogs. He has worried because his earnings have not been as large this month as they were a year ago. He overlooks all of the blessings which have been bestowed upon him, and lies awake nights because the dollar is more elusive than it used to be.

And there is a young fellow who has a steady job. His wages are practically the same as they were in the "good old days." He wears good clothes, can afford many luxuries, lives in a neat cottage, and is unencumbered by debt. But he is badly worried. He doesn't have but three good suits, and he hasn't had a new automobile since last spring. He's carrying his "bag of troubles" ungracefully, and he howls like an Indian every time he meets a friend.

And a tradesman passes with his dinner bucket—a bucket filled to the brim with wholesome food. He has cared for his family like a good fellow, and the people honor him. His job is steady, his hours are pleasant, his pay is fair. But that same scowl has left its mark on his otherwise pleasant face. He's troubled about economic conditions—the nation faces disaster.

Down the street trips a pretty woman. Her gown is of sheerest silk, her stockings are as finely woven as a cobweb. Her shoes are of imported leather. Around her neck is a fox fur which probably had its origin up in the Hudson Bay Country. She's pretty, she's popular, she has every reason to be happy. But hard times are on the fair lady's face; she's worrying about the depression. Her children wear the best that money can buy, her home is a model of comfort; but she's fuming and fretting herself sick over imaginary troubles.

It's the same story everywhere: Folks forget that bodily comfort and pleasant surroundings and true friendships are the things that really matter . . . that gold and jewels and fine raiment are just the glamorous decorations of living. They fail to realize that the sun shines just as brightly on their humble premises as on the king's mansion; that the stars which twinkle with friendly abandon in the heavens belong equally as much to them as to the crowned monarchs of the eastern world. They forsake the infinite for the finite, they become worshipers of false gods.

There is a depression, just as surely as there is an earth or a heaven, but folks here have little reason for complaint. Their blessings have been numerous, their sorrows insignificant. And lots of the talk we hear about hard times (to use a slangy expression) is just "plain, unadulterated 'baloney.'"

THE LETTER-BOX

MUNICIPAL GARDENS

There has been much done to help the unemployed in this community, but the need still is great, especially where homes contain man little children whose bodies are neither nourished nor clothed. Many of the towns in the state have planted municipal gardens from which vegetables may be obtained for those who can not become gardeners themselves. Williamston has plenty of vacant spots that could be used, and there is some acreage around the water plant which would furnish much food this spring, summer, and fall. Men in the employ of the town could be used during spare moments, and a number of the unemployed would be only too glad to help in the cultivation of these crops. Both sweet and Irish potatoes could be grown in a quantity helpful to many.

Salads, onions, turnips, and other quick-growing vegetables would furnish nourishment for the poorly fed children. Those people having garden spots of their own could be given seed and fertilizer and thus helped to live. It is not too late for the board of aldermen to consider the matter and start something worth while. The money expended would bring a splendid return during the year. Why not act now.

Wilkes Farmers Do Considerable Terracing

To prevent soil erosion in Wilkes County, the farmers have done considerable terracing this spring and will plant a larger acreage of grass and clover.

The State cotton cooperative during the past 10 years has handled 1,200,000 bales of cotton for which it paid back to members in excess of $100,000,000. Its members now number more than 13,000.
