COMPETITION IN SALE OF FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

South and West Constantly Fight for Market in New York

By G. A. CARDWELL

A constant fight goes on between the South and West for place or rather to place and sell fruits and vegetables in the City of New York. This great city is the key-market of the country. Its teeming millions must have more than 500 cars of fruits and vegetables every 24 hours. It is a market that is well worth fighting for—and the fight never lets up.

A recent statement issued by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics shows unloads in New York during 1931 of 19 fruits and vegetables (not including asparagus, beans, peas, carrots, beets, bananas, and mixed vegetables) of 153,072 carloads, motor truck receipts included. Chicago, Philadelphia, and Boston come next in order of unloads, but far down the line compared to New York receipts.

When growers and shippers on the Pacific Coast and in Western States began to have a surplus of fruits and vegetables to market, they looked around for some place to dispose of their produce. They soon discovered their opportunity in the east, particularly in New York; being far removed from the large fruit and vegetable consuming centers on the East Coast, capable leaders in the West realized early in the development of this highly perishable industry that they must send to market produce as good, and if possible better produce, than that being shipped to New York and other eastern city markets from the southeast and from other nearby producing sections.

By superior packaging and standardization the western produce growers and shippers sought to win the confidence of receivers, wholesalers, retailers, and consumers. This they did to an almost unbelievable extent; and they have been able to maintain the place won in distributive channels because of their close adherence to the high standards fixed.

In the Market Growers Journal of August, 1931, a writer said: "Perhaps the best examples of the soundness of this policy (meaning packing and standardization) is found in the development of head lettuce growing and shipping in California. Although in the early days of shipment, several types of packages were used, last year every one of the 37,473 carloads, or 11,991,300 crates, were of the same container, lined with paper, and the number of heads plainly indicated.

"The hotel and restaurant trade like the California package because they know just what they are buying and can estimate their requirements almost to the salad. And the retail store operator likes the package because, knowing just how many heads it contains and its uniform quality, he can calculate his profits before he buys. The demand from these two factors has made the package and the product popular with the wholesale and receiver, and the result has been a tremendous increase in shipments.

"The same condition pertains to practically all vegetables packed in the West."

Vegetables growers and shippers in the Carolinas and elsewhere in the South could well tear a leaf from the Western boom of experience. We have many advantages over our competitor and possibly because of this we have thought lightly of western competition; but one "big" advantage that the west has over us is their very evident determination to send to market produce so attractively packaged and skillfully standardized that buyers all along the line will be on the lookout for it, and will pass by fresher but less attractive produce because of their knowledge of the high quality standard consistently observed by individuals and associations in western trucking districts.

SIDE-DRESSING COTTON PAYS

Results of Experiments Are Made Public by College Authorities

Many farmers have found that early side-dressing of cotton with a quick-acting nitrogen is a good guarantee for the payment of fertilizer bills.

The South Carolina Experiment Station at Clemson College, S. C., has just released Bulletin No. 283, which covers a period of three years experiments on three experiment station farms and 15 farms where the work was supervised by experiment station workers, that should be of interest to all cotton growers. In the summary of this publication we find that "100 pounds of sodium nitrate increased the yield of seed cotton 222 pounds per acre. The use of additional 100-pound increments of sodium nitrate resulted in increase in yield of 201, 76, and 45 pounds of seed cotton per acre, respectively." From this three-year test it would seem that one should get more than 200 pounds of seed cotton for each 100 pounds of the first 200 pounds of nitrate of soda used.

This is further borne out by five years results of demonstrations conducted with North Carolina farmers and county agents in cooperation with the Chilean Nitrate Educational Bureau, Inc. The average yield for this five-year period where 500 pounds of 8-3-3 fertilizer per acre was used, was 1154 pounds of seed cotton. Where 500 pounds of 8-3-3 was used at planting and 200 pounds of Chilean Nitrate at chopping time, the yield in seed cotton average 1,727 pounds per acre, or an increase of 573 pounds seed cotton.

Using these figures, which seem to be justified by the results of both careful experiments and field tests, we find that $4.50 in nitrate of soda returned $11.46 in seed cotton, priced at 2 cents per pound. The average farmer got his cost out of the nitrate and $6.96 to apply to other costs.

Both the experimental work and the field demonstrations show that it is best to apply the nitrate early. This is especially true under favorable boll-weevil conditions.

Wake Up Your Liver Bile - Without Calomel

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move it down and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays. In the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. Your bowels, thick, bad taste and your breath is full of often breaks out in hives. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Request a substitute, 25¢ at all stores. © 1931, C. L. Co.

Hyde County Family Is Robbed of $1200

According to a Recent News Item From Washington, N. C.

The family were attending an orphans' concert recently in Swan Quarter, and when they returned home, they discovered that a small safe in which they kept their money had been opened and the money stolen. The money represented the savings of a lifetime and was all they had except their home and farm produce.

It is dangerous to leave money hidden around the house. Put your money in a savings account, where it will be safe and busy earning interest.
