When Business Will Improve

Business will never improve much until we increase our volume of circulation, or cut our flow of interest. When our government doubles the amount of our money or cuts all debts in half, we will have good business again.

The Begging Line Grows

The line of beggars is growing daily. Things can not improve just as long as men wait for work, and there is no work.

Barring a few cases of real misfortune, it is safe to say that most of the hunger in the southland comes from ignorance and laziness. Many heads of families have very little more knowledge of how to lay out plans to make a living than a horse. They have always had a leader to do the thinking and directing. They may be honest and industrious, yet have never gotten to the point in the activity of life to think for themselves. Now that the man who has helped that class of workers is no longer able to help them, they are at a loss to know which way to turn and are doubtless in the worst shape of any class of people to be found.

Of course, the lazy never have much any way. When times are good, they find it easier to beat a living than when times are hard. The families of the lazy deserve sympathy, but the man who is too lazy to do when he can deserves to be paid in actual hunger.

Riding For a Fall

Those bond-boasting New York bankers are headed for a fall in their project to hold the price of bonds up. It can not be done until the public can earn enough to pay the interest on the bonds.

Railroads must haul freight and passengers and collect money to pay their bond interest, and it makes no difference how loud New York bankers boost bonds they can not hold the prices up so long as the general traffic and prices of labor and products are so low that they produce nothing to pay bond interest with.

And it may be that this is the same gang that so recently sold billions of foreign stocks and bonds to honest investors throughout the country and robbed their customers of large sums by recommending these bonds and stocks as sound investments. They, however, pocketed their commissions, running into many millions.

It may be that they are trying to boost other bonds with the view of unloading more bonds on those who may have money. If they can boost the price and sell out, then they can fall or be defaulted on the "other fellow."

The trouble with those New Yorkers is that they do not seem to understand that they have struck business such a hard blow that it proved fatal, and now they are trying to throw a little cold water in the victim's face to resuscitate it. But, alas, they have killed it. They have drawn too much blood from the body of business, and now there is nothing left except the corpse or the carcass.

It is high time to wrest the governmental reins from the hands of big business and let little business get into the saddle for a while. Then more folks will be helped.

Whenever big business is called to the White House to help make plans for the Government, it means nothing more than putting the government at its disposal, that their investments may be made more secure, and their dividends larger.

Yet those in authority do not seem to understand that the people, the foundation upon which all business, and all society is based.

The conflict is still between man and money. The financiers want to make money king; the poor want to make man king.

No More Third Parties

In 1895 and 1896, there was great political turmoil and strife. The political lines were then held so tight that those people who were pleading and working for reform could not approach and participate in the councils of the old parties. Consequently they became mad and organized the Populist party, with the best of intentions and honest principles. Not being schooled in the tricks of the politicians, they were soon imposed upon by the designing and dirty politicians, which soon wrecked and ruined their party. The Populists broke up, and having been scoffed at, buffeted and abused by old friends of previous days, they drifted into all kinds of camps.

We now have a real political struggle, which is calling for the best thought and wisest acts of the people.

Things are now very different, however, as to the course the people propose to follow. They are simply going to rally to the support of the best man available, demand of him that their voices be heard and their wishes heeded.

The power of the ballot is now very badly needed. Voters should choose servants rather than masters and dodgers. Voters should use the ballot freely, not merely because some friends asks them but because the ballot, when properly used, will finally win out and insure us liberty.

Some of our greatest troubles in the past have come about because the electors have listened to the words of political liutenants and done no thinking for themselves. They forget that they are the equals of the highest in the councils of state and that the ballot box is where all men are on one common level. Just as long as we vote for people who ask us, without first binding themselves as our servants, we need not expect good government.

The Same People Frequent Courts

Sampson Independent.

The Whiteville News-Reporter ventures the assertion "That there is a ring of 200 people in Columbus County who furnish at least three-fourths of all the court cases which come before the county recorder." The same thing prevails in this county, and no doubt in all the counties of the state.

We have thought of this fact often and wondered how those who so frequently figure in the courts manage to finance the costs. And we have noted also that in many instances those who most frequently appear in the courts are those least able to afford it. It has been said that even the winner loses when a matter is taken into the courts. That is, of course, speaking from the financial side. Courts are expensive, not only to the counties and municipalities but to those who furnish work for the courts.

The Whiteville paper states further that "The natural deduction can be only that some of the people living in this county (Columbus) have acquired the habit of breaking the law, and they are constantly being hauled into court for some minor or major transgression, as the case may be." This also applies to other counties, and it is often minor trifles in the way of law violations that claim the attention of the courts, especially the county recorder's court. If there were no such courts, then these matters would claim the attention of the higher court, and likely at additional cost to the county and the principals. Habits are easily cultivated, and that of being tried in the courts apparently is not adverse to the general rule.

The News-Reporter goes so far as to state that "If the county were rid of this gang of 200 (estimated) people, we venture to assert that the court before the recorder would be a trivial matter, "if at all necessary." Probable truth in that statement, too, but we are not aware of a plan whereby a county may rid itself of those who make it a habit to frequent the courts. They're citizens, too.
