

PROPER GINNING OF IMPORTANCE, CO-OP MAN SAYS

Trash and Roughness of Lint Will Cause Grade To Be Lowered

Raleigh.—"Pin leaves," trash, and unnecessary roughness of the lint and the penalty they exact from the producer by lowering the grade of his cotton can be practically eliminated through proper ginning, according to Benbury Haywood, head classer of the North Carolina Cotton Growers Co-operative Association.

Mr. Haywood exhibited samples which showed wide variation in smoothness and emphasized the need of farmers having their cotton ginned properly.

Deliveries to the association, he said, are averaging better than middling one inch.

Although he said he has observed no "gin-cut" cotton this season, Mr. Haywood warned against ginning cotton while it is green or too wet. For proper ginning the moisture content should be from 6 to 12 per cent, he said.

The head classer pointed out that the gin should be slowed down for long staple cotton and that the rolls should be changed before allowing long staple to follow short staple cotton at the gin, or vice versa, else "two-sided" bales will result.

Charles W. Eldridge, 101 years old, of St. Petersburg, Fla., claims to have voted in 20 presidential elections.

TURN TO GRAIN WHEN DROUGHT CUTS CORN CROP

Duplin Farmer, Faced With Feed Shortage, Finds Way Out

When drought cut the yield of corn on the farm of J. M. Holland of Duplin County, he turned to small grain as a supplementary feed crop to tide him over the shortage of corn.

"Mr. Holland usually produces more than 1,000 bushels of corn each year, but this season he has had no rain hardly since May and the prospective corn yield has been cut at least in half," says Enos C. Blair, extension agronomist at State College. Mr. Holland would be facing a very serious feed shortage now had it not been for five acres of wheat and five acres of barley which he planted last year. From this acreage he harvested 115 bushels of wheat and 120 bushels of barley, or 235 bushels in all.

This grain will be used in connection with the corn crop of the present season to supply feed for the Holland livestock this winter. In addition he expects to plant an additional acreage this fall for grazing early next spring or harvesting as grain, according to his needs. This will carry him through until the harvest of 1933, says Blair.

In planting his barley and wheat last fall, Mr. Holland planted in October without fertilizer. In March, he top-dressed the grain with quick-acting nitrogen fertilizer and when ripe, the grain was cut and threshed

CROP ROTATION SYSTEM NEEDED

Sound Cropping Plans Are Seldom Followed On Small Farms

A farm broken up into small, poorly-shaped fields on which no systematic crop rotation is practiced usually does not pay. When such farms have been reorganized, better results have been the result.

"This is the finding of the North Carolina Experiment Station in reorganizing several farms at the request of owners in both piedmont and eastern North Carolina," says R. H. Rogers of the department of agricultural economics at State College. "We have analyzed a number of farms where we found fields about three acres in size and no definite crop rotation followed. A sound cropping plan is impossible on such small, numerous fields and as a result production costs are high. Cover crops needed to reduce erosion and soil building legume crops are generally absent from the farming program and most of the plant food has to be bought each year."

On such farms, Rogers finds the labor to be over-worked during a few months and practically idle for other long periods.

The experience of past years in reorganizing farms shows first the necessity of an inventory of all property; next, the need of a detailed map of the farm; third, a definite cropping plan, which may be changed as needed; fourth, fields rearranged to suit the cropping plan adopted; fifth, addition of livestock according to the amount of feed produced and sixth, a budget of production and farm income.

Mr. Rogers believes that a simple farm record should be kept of returns from fields and crops and that the outlook information issued each spring should be carefully studied.

with a combine at a cost of $4 an acre.

Mr. Blair says it is only good insurance for all farmers to begin to plan for some supplementary crops. A field of small grain will likely come in handy on every farm, and the land may be used next summer to the ordinary field crops if there is no need for the grain.
