

PASTURE IS NOT ESSENTIAL FOR FATTENING HOGS

However, Pigs Should Have Access To Grass and Pasture Hay

Four feeding trials conducted by Earl H. Hostetler, in charge of research in animal husbandry for the North Carolina Experiment Station, indicate that when young pigs have access to grass and pasture before they are put in the feeding lot, the pasture is not so necessary for gains and profits thereafter.

"Our tests show that a well-balanced ration will produce just as satisfactory results when pigs are fed in a dry lot as when fed to comparable pigs on pasture," says Mr. Hostetler. "However, we want it kept in mind that the pigs we used in these trials had access to nutritious pasture grasses from soon after birth until they were started on the tests. If pasture had not been supplied during this period, it is likely that the pigs in the dry lot would hardly have had sufficient vitamin A to carry them thru the fattening period."

Mr. Hostetler says the pigs full-fed a balanced ration on pasture did make slightly more rapid gains and were ready for market five days earlier than those in the dry lot. When this pasture was charged at its actual cost, however, the pigs in the dry lot were more profitable.

This test was conducted to learn if pastures are more valuable to the breeding herd, to young pigs or to fattening pigs; or, are they essential to the well-being of all three groups. The results seem to indicate that they are valuable to the breeding herd and to young pigs, but not so vital to those animals which have been selected for finishing and market at an average weight of about 200 pounds.

A valuable research paper covering all phases of this question has been prepared by Mr. Hostetler for presentation at the annual meeting of the American Society for Animal Production, which meets in Chicago this month.
