COTTON FUTURE IS DISCOURAGING

Outlook Points to Six-Cent Cotton for Crop This Coming Season

Were it not that cotton is about the only crop that many farmers can grow for a supply of cash, its production in North Carolina this year should not be attempted, believes C. B. Williams, head of the department of agronomy at State College.

The crop will sell for only about six cents a pound, according to the present outlook, and farmers can best beat the depression now by growing more of this six-cent product but by producing enough food and feed to meet their own requirements and that of their tenants and workstock, Mr. Williams says. After this has been arranged for, then the landowner should consider cotton or other cash crops.

"This is the year of all years to place first emphasis upon the production of food and feed crops," says Mr. Williams. "We have been flooded with questions recently asking us whether it will pay to fertilize cotton under present conditions. Our answer is that if the cotton is correctly fertilized, properly cultivated and planted with good seed on the best adapted land, it may return a small profit or pay a moderate wage for the time and effort put into its production. I think this statement will hold true if the season is at all normal."

Mr. Williams said he was basing his conclusions upon research work with cotton in both the coastal plain and piedmont sections of the State.

Tests conducted through a period of 20 years show that when the price of seed cotton is as low as at present, it is almost impossible to make sufficient acre yields to pay the cost of producing, harvesting and ginning, unless the crop has been fertilized. Therefore, he says, unless one can fertilize his cotton, he had best not grow it, because the fixed expenses will be too high for profit at present prices.
