Regulation of Trucks

Truck traffic on the highways of the nation and the cost it exacts in the loss of human life and damage to property are at last attracting attention of the regulators, and now comes the announcements that truck speeds will be held within the 35-mile-an-hour limit.

This is only one step in the right direction, and the solution will never be wholly reached until the heavy freight traffic is removed from the highways and returned to the railroads, where it belongs.

The highway shipping spree has cost this state millions of dollars, careful surveys showing that despite the taxes levied on trucks for gasoline and licenses, the amount received is not adequate to offset the damage done to the roads. And if the State is to accept this expense, then certainly it should see that all regulations are met by the truck operators.

Defining a Doo-Hickey

Columbia State.

"Rubber heels, please," said the gentleman in the shoe shop, "but I don't want that little doo-hickey in the middle of the heel."

A doo-hickey? The repairer glanced at the shoe and nodded comprehension. The doo-hickey was a core of hard rubber set in the middle of the heel.

So that's a doo-hickey? Well, sometimes. We heard a young bride the other day saying that she had a grand new gas stove with a cute little doo-hickey on the side to tell how hot the oven was and to keep her from burning up any more biscuits.

In the seed store an amateur gardener wanted a doo-hickey to spray her shrubbery with. The young man with the new car proudly showed his girl the shiny doo-hickey on the instrument board for her to light her cigarette by.

The girl in the millinery shop liked that odd-shaped green hat, but the gold doo-hickey on the front just wouldn't do.

In the ten-cent store a girl wanted to see all those doo-figgers people put on whatnots.

A hostess thinking up refreshments for her next party considered those different kinds of doo-lollies you put on toothpicks.

A scornful male sat on a feminine suitcase to close it, but the pink-and-white doo-dads kept sticking out so he had an awful time.

The English language, by one inclusive figure, boasts some 400,000 words. Whether one uses the "basic" 800 that some find ample for expression, or rises to the 2,000 or 3,000 words of average English and American speech, or even reaches toward the great range of Shakespeare and Woodrow Wilson, with their 15,000-word vocabularies, everyone seems to need and to use some of these queer, made-up utility words.

What should we do without that aid to failing memory, "what's his name?" How would straining descriptive powers manage without "what-you-may-call-it" and "what-you-may-call-ems"? Where is a more comprehensive phrase for the hungry than the lowly "sump'n-to-eat"? Add to this group "something-or-other" (corrupted usually to "sump'n-or-nuther"), "thing-um-a-bob" and "thing-um-a-jig," and the limping linguist has several sturdy crutches to swing him over the roughest spots of halting expression.

WHITE CLEAN RAGS WANTED: Strings or woolen rags will not be accepted. We pay 5c pound for rags in good condition. The Enterprise Publishing Co.
