

President Says Depressions And Booms Must Go

Economic Security and Stability for the People Is Still F. D. R.'s Goal

Speaking at ceremonies dedicating the new Federal Reserve Building in Washington a few days ago, President Roosevelt said the government must improve and coordinate credit and other machinery to "achieve and maintain an enduring prosperity, free from the disastrous extremes of booms and depressions."

The chief executive did not mention the recent activities of the stock market. A portion of his address, however, appeared to give a partial answer to those who have blamed administration policies for the stock market plunge.

Reciting that the government has made many changes in its monetary and credit machinery in the last few years, Mr. Roosevelt said that "it must continue step by step to make the banking system what it should be."

"We must not complacently suppose that we have achieved perfection," he asserted, adding: "By the Banking and Security acts of 1933, 1934 and 1935, the Federal Reserve System was given increased power to improve banking conditions and to aid the Government in combatting practices which were evil in their results."

Now More Concentrated
"Those powers have been concentrated to a greater degree than before in a single public body, so that they can be used promptly and effectively in accordance with the changing needs of the country."

The President served notice the administration plans no reversal of its banking policies, asserting: "1937 is not 1913; nor do we want to turn the hands of the clock back."

Earlier, the executive referred to creation of the reserve system in President Wilson's administration. He spoke, too, of "the courageous leadership in the congress for which the senior senator from Virginia, Carter Glass, will always deserve the nation's gratitude."

Senator Glass was instrumental in creation of the reserve system.

Re-outlining his often-expressed goal of gaining "for all of our people the greatest attainable measure of economic well being" and the "largest degree of economic security and stability," the chief executive continued:

"The advance of the country toward this goal is the real mission of the Federal Reserve System."

"It cannot be attained by that system alone, but neither can it be reached without the proper functioning of our monetary and credit machinery."

"That machinery must be steadily perfected and co-ordinated with all other instruments of government to promote the most productive utilization of our human and material resources.

Toward Sounder Banking
"Only in that way can our economic system and our democratic institutions endure."

Tracing developments through the 1920's, the president said that changes in the banking system in that period would have tended "to moderate the forces that brought about the great depression."

Then, after citing changes in the Reserve System in recent years, the president asserted that the system "is a piece of machinery vital to the nation's steady progress toward the goal of a sounder banking system capable of contributing its full share to lasting economic progress and well-being."

The Reserve Board, he said, has power over the volume and cost of money, and thus may exert "a powerful influence upon the expansion and contraction in the flow of money through the channels of agriculture, trade and industry."

"In this way much can be done toward the maintenance of more stable employment. Much can be done to aid in achieving greater stability of the true value of the dollar."

Although saying the board's powers can contribute much to national progress, Mr. Roosevelt added that "monetary powers possess no peculiar magic."

"They are not omnipotent," he said. "To be effective in performing their function, they must be closely co-ordinated with the other major powers and policies of government which influence the country's economic life."

Beware Coughs from common colds That Hang On

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is one word—not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)

Turkey May Oust Bald Eagle As U.S. National Emblem

Is Native of This Country and Also Has Better Habits

Twin Falls, Idaho—As the 1937 turkey crop is being fattened for the Thanksgiving market, a move is launched by the Northwestern Turkey Growers' Association to depose the eagle as the national bird of the United States, and put the turkey in his place.

It isn't a joke, but a serious proposal, as shown by an agreement to send copies of this resolution to senators and representatives of the 14 western states, suggesting that they see what can be done about it.

Action was taken at a recent convention of the organization when Herbert Beyers of Salt Lake City, Utah, association manager, said: "We figure the turkey has the better habits of the two birds, is a native of this country, and is more emblematic of the nation. For that reason we'd like to see the change made."

The proposal is to place the turkey as an official insignia on silver pieces and state papers, in place of the white-headed or bald eagle. As far as tradition is concerned, turkey growers declared, such time-worn jokes as "the miser pinched the quarter until the eagle squawked" could easily be changed to "until the turkey gobbled."

Furthermore, they cited historical references to the effect that Benjamin Franklin proposed adoption of the turkey as the national emblem and disparaged the eagle on the ground that he is cowardly and has flesh-eating habits.

Approving that idea, the turkey growers adopted a resolution reading: "Inasmuch as the eagle, now known as the national bird, is not peculiar to America, but is also claimed as emblematic by other countries, and the turkey, as proven by history, science and the habits of the American people, is by far the nobler and more typically American, be it resolved . . . that the proposal to have the turkey replace the eagle as the national bird of the United States of America be adopted as just and fitting."

The turkey growers didn't explain the paradox of their suggesting this bird as the national emblem, all the while they are using every means to encourage greater consumption of turkey meat in order to create a better market for this important western farm product.
