Business was interrupted in the station for a short while, and most of the warehouse district employees were present for the ceremony.

State Farmers To Get Their Checks

College Station, Raleigh — The work of checking farmers' compliance with the 1937 agricultural conservation program is about 96 per cent completed, H. A. Patten of State College, states.

Some counties have completed all their field work and are now preparing growers' applications for payment for submission to the state office at State College, he said.

As fast as the applications are checked at the state office, they will be authorized for payment. However, Patten said, it may be some time yet before checks are mailed out.

A few counties were delayed in their work because the aerial photographs used in checking compliance were not completed as soon as in other counties. These counties expect to complete their checks in two to three weeks, Patten added.

In checking compliance, county committees determine whether growers planted more than their allotted acreage of soil-depleting crops and whether they carried out the prescribed amount of soil-building practices for which payment is offered.

Flying weather has been good during the past few weeks, Patten continued, and three planes are busy taking pictures in about 18 counties for use in the 1938 program.

It has been found that with aerial photographs, the areas of farms and different fields can be determined more accurately and with less expense than can be done with ground measurements.
