move over and share the favored seat with the common dirt farmer. They have reason to oppose the new farm bill; the farmer has none.

Farmers of Martin County, you may not know what will happen following the passage of this bill, but it can well be marked down in the lasting pages of history that a vote against it is for a return to the hectic days that bordered on starvation and want during the early part of the thirties. Don't let interests foreign to you still up ill will and discontent among your own ranks. Go to the polls on Saturday of this week and vote solidly your own convictions.

Merely an Interruption

The people were beginning to feel sorry for senators a little while back when it was announced the august body would sit in night sessions to speed up the legislative business. Nothing was said about it, but all the while night sessions were being considered, the senators were not reporting for duty until 12 o'clock noon. That's getting no where fast.

About the only disagreeable feature to night sessions would have been the interruption of "night life" in the gay political whirl. As for speeding up legislation by holding night sessions, it just can't be done when all the morning part of the Creator's day is spent doing nothing.

Upsetting That Balance Statesville Daily

It was quite nice of President Roosevelt to refer to North Carolina as a "Balanced State." In fact, if we remember aright, he called us one of the best-balanced states in the Union. And now we are planning to indent his words on our auto tags as a worthwhile slogan. We don't think there will be anyone so unloyal in North Carolina—as to plead his constitutional rights in ridding his tag of the words, as was the case in New York where the license plates are used to advertise the world's fair.

One daily paper carried a story telling of the plan for this "Balanced State" to thus advertise itself, but unfortunately right alongside the tale was this news item that takes some of the starch out of our "balance":

Raleigh, Feb. 22.—Despite a North Carolina statute, upheld by an opinion of the Attorney General, making such confinements illegal, 66, or more than six per cent of the 1,070 children under sixteen years of age committed to 72 county jails of the State during 1937 were less than ten years old, according to a statement issued Tuesday by Dr. J. Wallace Nygard, director of the Division of Institutions and Corrections, State Board of Charities and Public Welfare.

Sixty-six ten-year-old youngsters in the common county jails of North Carolina is not a pleasant picture to look at, and by all means somebody should have seen to it that this stick of type be placed two or three columns away from the prideful reference to a "Balanced State." That is what you'd call a grievous social error.

Little Travels to Homes of the Great

By H. B. C.

Samuel Pepys, 1633-1703, whose motto was, "the mind makes the man," was secretary of the Admiralty Board of the British Empire during the reign of Charles, the second. A man of keen intelligence and great practical sagacity and unbounded curiosity—one of the most engaging characters in history and his diary a unique production of literature. All through the disastrous plague and during the great fire when there was a general flight from the city, he remained in or near town, and went on with his work as usual.

He was a bibliophile of note and began collecting at an early age. Through the influence of his cousin and patron Sir Edward Montagu, he secured his secretaryship. Besides attending to his duties as secretary to the board, he devoted much time to collecting his magnificent library, unusual in size for a private collection of that day. As to his religious views—he lived and died in the accepted faith of a Christian. Was a regular attendant at church, sleeping through most of the dull sermons. He often flirted with pretty women. He loved and admired his wife, and was jealous of her. He left to the world a library and diary. The library finally going to St. Mary Magdalene College, upon the death of his nephew, John Jackson. Among his rare collections is a MS. list of the provisions and munitions of each ship in the Spanish Armada, and an account of the escape of Charles 2nd from Worcester, taken down in shorthand from the King's own dictation. The diary, which was written in shorthand, lurked unnoticed in the library for nearly a hundred years, when it was unearthed by the master of the college and then transcribed by the Rev. John Smith and published by Lord Braybrooke.

There has been several editions of the diary published; the latest one of which we have knowledge, being of nine volumes under the editorship of the well known antiquarian, Mr. H. B. Wheatley, contains everything that can be printed with due regard to propriety. It is a question whether Pepys ever intended the manuscript of his diary to be published. Some think he did not. He guarded it with great secrecy during his life, and wrote it in a mysterious short hand of his own, which would indicate he intended it for private use. But, whatever his intentions, it is fortunate for the world it was published.

Extracts: October 13th, 1660, To my Lord's in the morning, where I met Captain Cuttance, but my Lord not being up, I went out to Charing Cross, to see Major-General Harrison hanged, drawn, and quartered, which was done there, he looking as cheerful as any man could do in that condition. He was presently cut down, and his head and heart shown to the people, at which there were great shouts of joy. I saw the King beheaded at White Hall. From thence to my Lord's, and took Captain Cuttance and Mr. Shepley to the Sun Tavern, and did give them oysters. After that I went by water home, where I was angry with my wife for her things lying about, and in my passion kicked the little fine basket, which I bought for her in Holland, and broke it, which troubled me after I had done it. At night to bed. November 3rd, 1661, Lord's Day; This day I stirred not out, but took physque, and all the day as I was at leisure, I did read. At night my wife and I had a good supper by ourselves of a pullet hashed, which pleased me much to see my condition come to allow ourselves a dish like that, and so at night to bed. 4th, In the morning to White Hall, by coach with my wife and Sir W. Penn; then to Mr. Coventry's about business; all three home again. Mr. Pierce the purser, got us a most brave chine of beef and a dish of marrowbones. Company came, very merry. March 30th, 1662, Easter Day. Having my old black suit furnished, I was pretty neat in clothes today, and my boy, his old suit, new trimmed, very handsome. To church in the morning, and so home, leaving the two Sir Williams to take sacrament, which I blame myself that I have hitherto neglected all my life, but once or twice at Cambridge. Dined with my wife, a good shoulder of veal well dressed by Jane, and handsomely served to table, which pleased us much. My wife and I to church in the evening and seated ourselves * * * she below me * * * so to supper which was well served. We had a lobster with a crab Peg Penn sent my wife this afternoon, the reason of which we cannot think, but something there is a plotter design in it, for we have a little while carried ourselves pretty strange to them. After supper to bed. January 13th, 1662. My poor wife rose by five o'clock in the morning, before day, and went to market and bought fowl and many other things for dinner, with which I was well pleased * * up and to home, whither by and by comes Dr. Clerke and his lady, and sister and a she-cozen, and Mr. Pierce and his wife, which were all my guests. I had for them, after oysters at first course, a hash of rabbits, a lamb and a rare chine of beef, next a great dish of roasted fowl, which cost me 30 s., and a tart, and then fruit and cheese. * * *

"I GROW CHOICE TOBACCO"

IT'S A FACT THAT CAMEL USES COST-LIER TOBACCO. LAST YEAR I HAD A DANDY CROP AND THE CAMEL PEOPLE BOUGHT ALL MY CHOICE LOTS. MOST PLANTERS SOLD THEIR HIGH GRADES OF TOBACCO TO CAMELS, THE SAME AS I DID. SO YOU CAN SEE WHY CAMEL IS MY CIGARETTE

FLOYD SMITHER—experienced tobacco planter

MR. SMITHER gives the opinion of a great number of tobacco planters when he reports: "For their own smoking—the majority of tobacco growers prefer Camels." Men who know tobacco from the ground up prefer Camels. They want to enjoy the special treat of smoking Camel's finer, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCO—Turkish and Domestic.

"We smoke Camels because we know tobacco"

Farmer Friends—

We have on hand for immediate delivery a full supply of seed potatoes, oats, garden seeds—both bulk and package, moth flakes, straw hats, hoes, rakes, guano sowers, etc. If it's general farm supplies, we have it.
