of the millions, then there would be no need for labor unions.

There has never been a period in American history when more pressure was brought by a minority group in an attempt to dictate the policies of the church, business and government itself. The preacher except in a few cases similar to the one reported in Ohio has compromised with the W. B. Gillies. Business has dominated the land for years for the sake of business, giving little consideration to the worker or the consumer. And when the government goes to the bat the masses, those who are having so much to say about civil liberties, shout there'll be a dictator tomorrow.

For more than five years, the Roosevelt administration has withstood the attack of the few to restore civil liberty to the masses. Now the American Bar association steps in at this late day, urging the protection of civil liberty. Could it mean that it will glory in the spunk of the working man who dares to join a labor union and demand the right to a living wage, or is it to throw its embracing arms around the guiding bodies of business and maintain there the right of William B. Gillies to tell the clergy what to preach and what not to preach?

Just Another Problem

A modern farmer with a modern family said the other day that low-priced tobacco had proved a problem for him in some years, but that his latest problem every year was to make enough out of growing tobacco to buy smokes for the wife, sons and daughter.

Taking Them in Order

Those who have been chiding Governor Clyde Hoey about inviting others to North Carolina's playgrounds and then going into other states to do his own vacationing forget that Mr. Hoey, the candidate, saw all the provinces first just before the June primary, 1936, and again just before the second primary of that year. The trip was politically bent, and the Governor himself will tell the world it was anything but a vacation.

A Question

Randolph Tribune.

This is a question to those women who buy their clothes out of town.

Does your husband make his living and yours in Asheboro?

Does his income come from the pockets of Asheboro citizens, from an Asheboro enterprise—or is he obligated to some larger trading center not far distant for the money he makes?

In asking this question, we are merely asking you to weigh your own welfare to determine what measure of loyalty you owe your home city and remind you that Asheboro's progress and prosperity depend on your support.

When you shop out of town, you pay as much or more for merchandise, plus transportation cost and time spent. And you seldom get any better style than you'll find in Asheboro stores.

This is aimed particularly at the women folk, but it might apply equally to the men. How many men are there in Asheboro, who make their living right here and off Asheboro folk, who can't wear a suit of clothes, or a shirt or a tie, unless it comes from some fashionable store in a larger city?

Civil Liberties

The American Bar Association, in annual session at Cleveland a few days ago, urged the setting up of a committee to defend and protect civil liberties. On the same page of the paper carrying the bar story and just three columns removed was printed a story in which a pastor charged he had been forced by steel officials to resign his charge in a Youngstown, Ohio, church.

Now just for whom is the Bar Association going to bat, the steel officials or the minister? The records of the Bar Association in the past lean to the self-assumed right of big and little steel to hire and fire, to stifle competition and not to the right of a minister of the gospel to stand in his pulpit and preach. The American Bar Association wants, as many others want, to see civil liberties maintained for one group, and one group only. They want to see that William B. Gillies, vice president of a Youngstown, Ohio steel plant, is not molested when he kicks out Rev. Orville C. Jones, a young clergyman of the Ohio town. They want to see that no interference comes from government or any other source when steel plant officials command pastors to keep their church members from joining a labor union.

The American Bar Association will do well to apply a mop at the bar of justice, the bar where the barristers connive to thwart the rights of some and lay false claims to freedom for others.

When the American Bar Association and other great organizations of its kind step in to see that the preachers can preach a gospel unworried by the liberal giver's influence, that a man has a right to join a union if he wants to join, that the common man would enjoy the same liberty but possibly in a different way as that enjoyed by the magnate who sits in on the meetings of an interlocking directorate for forty firms, then something of value will have been accomplished. If the same association and similar organizations would fight for the right
