those details must be tuned to the whole or we may lose everything.

It is wrong, no doubt, to teach the young buck that the world owes him a living, but it is not wrong to teach a child that the world owes him the right to make a living. And when a nation denies its youth that right, they should be told in the schools what to expect.

Thinking It Over

By Kay Camp

Said Diogenes: "Education is a controlling grace to the young, consolation to the old, wealth to the poor, and ornament to the rich."

Where could one find a more complete definition of what modern higher education definitely is not?

A student goes to college and specializes. He trains himself for one particular job and rigidly excludes from his course of study every subject that does not bear directly and specifically upon that type of work. He knows that one think and nothing else. He becomes a specialist and his training isolates him from every other interest in life.

Too narrow or technical specialization in education sometimes defeats the very purposes it is designed to serve. For instance, the dean of a medical school said recently that students who had a broad cultural training as a rule mastered medical subjects more quickly and thoroughly than those who had limited their pre-medical preparation to strictly scientific subjects. To cultivate the most helpful "bedside manner" the physician must know more than the technical tools of his trade.

One of the country's most prominent newspaper publishers said to a college president in answer to the query as to what subjects a student should pursue to qualify for journalistic work, "Give him a broad training in history, literature, the natural sciences, the humanities, mathematics. We will teach him the mechanics. He must know what to write. We will show him how."

It is necessary, of course, that there be highly specialized training for technical vocations. But a young man or woman who has become acquainted with the masters of good literature, who is familiar with some of the rich values revealed by the history of the human race, who has learned to coordinate and systematize his thinking through the laws of Mathematics and Logic, who, in other words, knows more than he is expected to know to do his particular job, is likely to go farther in that profession or vocation and to enjoy life more fully.

The Liberal Arts College still has its place in modern society.

A Faith For Living

Christian Science Monitor.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in his radiocast for the United Service Organizations, gave a creed which distills the experience of typical Americans and voices the hope of countless others. His statement is an epitome of the ethics and aims on which generations of God-fearing freemen have been reared. It exemplifies the deep-laid faith that grows about family firesides, and exalts the qualities which parents like to see reaffirmed in their sons.

"I believe in the supreme worth of the individual," began Mr. Rockefeller, enumerating ten points which he said had been guiding maxims in his family. Coupled with counsels of thrift, honesty, justice, and usefulness were these:

I believe that every right implies a responsibility; every opportunity, an obligation; every possession, a duty.

I believe in the dignity of labor, whether with head or hand; that the world owes no man a living but that it owes every man an opportunity to make a living.

I believe in an all-wise and all-loving God, named by whatever name, and that the individual's highest fulfillment, greatest happiness and widest usefulness are to be found in living in harmony with His will.

I believe that love is the greatest thing in the world; that it alone can overcome hate; that right can and will triumph over might.

Through practical, everyday services the United Service Organizations help keep American soldiers in touch with their loved ones and with the sources of sustaining faith. Such contacts will not make American soldiers soft but will make them strong. Millions of parents will agree with Mr. Rockefeller that they do not want their sons made "tough" by military training but they do want each one to be "a man with ideals, holding duty and honor above life."

Investment in Defense

Yes, defense is costly. But it is not as costly as war. To date this country's expenditures for defense represent less than 10 per cent of the current national income. War efforts cost Great Britain half her present national income, while Nazi Germany is spending 60 per cent. Dimes spent for defense now will save us dollars later.—Democratic National Committee.

Believe It Or Not!

Spring 1933: "Neither I nor anybody else in the National Socialist party advocates proceeding by anything but constitutional methods."—Adolf Hitler.

Spring 1941: "Neither I nor anybody else in the America First Committee advocates proceeding by anything but constitutional methods."—Chas. A. Lindbergh.

Boom Is Expected To Taper Off Soon

The boom that has been going on for seven or eight months in durable consumer goods—like autos, refrigerators, radios, stoves, vacuum cleaners and so forth—is bound to taper off soon. The demand is still strong as ever, probably stronger, but the fact that these things require not only materials, but also plant and manufacturing equipment needed for defense production, means that output for civilian use just has to be curtailed. A survey by the National Industrial Conference Board shows that more than one-fourth of all manufacturers of such products have already started to reduce their output for civilian use. . . . Indication of how these lines have been booming is seen in these retail sales figures for the first five months of this year, compared to the same period of 1940: Autos—up 41 per cent, and headed for the best model year since 1929. Mechanical refrigerators—up 35 per cent. Vacuum cleaners—up 20 per cent. Electric ranges—up 51 per cent. Radios—up 15 to 20 per cent. Furniture (new orders booked by manufacturers)—up 58 per cent.

Misbranded

There has been much said in recent months about the type of books used and the political faith of the professors in our schools and colleges. The Warren history does not enter this picture.

It is possible that some of the foreign isms are being "squeezed" into the modern school curriculum, and we, as every red-blooded American should be, are against it. It is also possible that some people would misbrand the type of education being dished out to the American youth. They refer to the Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights as great documents now, but wouldn't they have branded those movements as communistic or certainly as socialistic had they lived in those days? It is indeed possible that many of our teachers who are being accused of communistic leanings too are only trying to help better the lot of mankind by pointing out the flaws in our own system of government and appealing to the youth of the land to prepare themselves for the task of correcting those flaws.

With almost half of this country's population underfed and countless numbers hanging on to life by an economic thread, we can't say our system of government and our way of life are perfect. Surely, the system as a whole, is fine, but there are details foreign to the system and
