Here's a tip from C. J. Maupin, xtension poultryman of N. C. State ested in increasing his egg produc- days tion: Buy only certified chicks sired by pedigreed cockerels.

The grower following this advice would boost his average flock pro-duction by 25 or more eggs per hen annually. Then, too, the general use of such chicks in maintaining the laying flock, together with good feeding, care, and management. would provide several billion addi tional eggs a year for national defense needs

To qualify for U.S. Record of Performance rating under the Nation al Poultry Improvement Plan, cock erels must be from hens laying more than 200 eggs a year. The NPIP is a cooperative effort to improve poul-

Because the sire and dam are equally responsible for the level of production in the offspring, Maupin predicts ROP cockerels, or males of equally good pedigree, used in the average poultry flock, would raise the State's average annual production of 85 eggs per hen to 110 or

This increase, the specialist explained, is midway between average Hamilton; S. W. Fleming, Kansa; farm flock production and the profarm flock production and the production of pullet flocks from which hens are selected to produce ROP

One way to make certain that chicks purchased are sired by N. C. ROP males is to get them from Cer-tified or Verified hatcheries. County agents have available lists con-
