

Things To Watch For In The Future

Plastic tax tokens—Colorado, for one state, is replacing aluminum sales tax tokens with plastic ones, about the size of a dime, but thicker, and bright red . . . A "flying wing" plane is just that—tailless, and with power plant, cockpit and crew all housed within the huge V, and with two propellers, in the back, as "pushers"—it's been put through extensive tests by Northrop Aircraft Company . . .

Feed Situation In State Considered Very Bright

R. H. Ruffner, head of the State College Animal Industry Department, says the excellent crop of corn silage recently harvested in most sections of the State will go a long way toward decreasing feed bills this winter. Indications are that more corn silage was put up this year than ever before. Then, too, many silos have been filled with soybeans, lespezo and grass. Farmers looking for corn might investigate the tremendous supply now on sale in eastern North Carolina, that section producing one of its heaviest crops.

Change Recognized As Important Step In Bank's Progress

ble the facilities it has had in serving its customers in the old quarters, and the employees will have ample room for handling their work, aiding their efficiency.

The modernized building has an impressive appearance both on the inside and outside. Special name plates have been carefully fitted into the stone front on each side of the entrance, and a night depository has been provided, giving the bank the latest in equipment for serving its patrons.

While work in the main banking room and on the first floor has been completed, the modernization program is being extended to other parts of the building. New heating arrangements are being effected, and other details are being handled to equip the bank for offering every modern service. The board of directors, made up of well-known citizens in the community, will be located in renovated quarters.

The Crawford Insurance Agency will continue in its present location on the second floor, and the third story offices will be occupied right on by the present tenants.

Prospects of a higher average level of consumer purchasing power in 1942 means more income for vegetable producers in general, reports the U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

bers of the banking force are extending a cordial invitation to the general public to visit them in their new quarters on and after next Monday. Every possible arrangement has been effected to make the building convenient headquarters for banking visitors, and a spirit of friendliness will always be found there.

Just what use will be made of the building the Guaranty Bank is vacating, has not been learned here. It is understood the owners will consider altering it for possible occupancy.

The renovation of the big building gives Williamston and this community two of the finest banking structures to be found anywhere in this section of the State.

SCS Offers Cash For Kudzu Seed

The SCS is sending out an SOS to North Carolina farmers.

Earl Meacham, Extension soil conservationist of N. C. State College, says the Soil Conservation Service is making an urgent plea for North Carolina farmers to harvest every ounce of kudzu seed that can be located this fall.

The SCS has announced that it will pay market price for all the seed it can get. At the present time, this runs about one dollar a pound for cleaned seed, and 25 cents a pound for seed in the pod. Approximately five pounds of dried pods are required to make one pound of cleaned seed.

Until this year, the United States had depended on Japan, the home of kudzu for its seed supply. Now it appears that little if any will be imported from that country this year, which means that American agriculture again will have to fall back on its own resources.

Farmers and others knowing of a promising site where the kudzu is more than three or four years old are urged to inspect it carefully. Meacham said: If it has a good crop of seed pods, the work unit technician of the Soil Conservation Service in that district may be notified. Or the finder may write directly to the service in Spartanburg, S. C.

The most promising places for locating a good seed crop, Meacham explained, seem to be large gullies covered with kudzu, or fence rows, vacant lots, porches and old home sites. Kudzu usually produces more seed when it climbs over bushes, trees, fences, or trellises. Pods should not be picked until frost.
