Jeeps Are Hard On Soldiers' Trousers

Atlanta, Ga.—A soldier's trousers may wear out from too much sitting on the seat of a galloping jeep, but he won't have to wait long for a new pair under a plan announced recently by Brigadier General James L. Frank, Fourth Corps Area Quartermaster. The new system puts re-placement of clothing and equipage on an exchange basis.

This plan, already in operation as far as motor parts and general re-pair work on the army's vehicles are concerned, does away with the red tape of requisitions by replacing worn-out goods with new ones in a simple exchange. Under the old system, if a soldier's trousers wore out, he had to report that he needed new ones to his com-pany commander who in turn took the matter up with the supply offi-cer of his unit through a great deal of paper work in requisitions, corre-spondence and the like.

Under the new set-up, the soldier turns his worn-out trousers in to his company commander who in turn takes them, in a bundle with other clothing, to the supply officer of his unit. The supply officer then turns them in to the classification officer in the office of the post Quartermaster.

Immediately after the trousers are turned over to the classification officer, the post Quartermaster property officer issues new clothing for all the worn-out ones turned in. These are, in turn, reissued to the individual soldiers.

Not only does this new plan save both the enlisted man and the officer's time, but in the case of organizational equipment, such as office furniture, office machines, tents, certain items of specialized cloth-ing, and the like, a great deal of money is saved through the repairing of turned in articles. For example, two

The classification officer of the FOR SALE! post Quartermaster's officer decides whether the articles turned in under the new system can be repaired or whether their only practical desti-nation is salvage. Baby Chicks Issuance of replacement parts for the army's vehicles in the Fourth Corps Area is done by ten Motor Maintenance Districts strategically placed throughout the eight states MOORE comprising the corps area. Replace-ment parts are issued on the same Grocery Co.
