American lives on other fronts. He does not stop and think that there is some doubt if the United States, once the Siberian bases were occupied, could hold them just now. He does not stop and consider the possibility that with a full and considerate understanding now, the establishment of bases in Siberia would in all probability follow in due time. No, the wise and apparently all-selfish guys want to create strife and hate among the Allies and then condemn them for not being friendly and cooperative with us.

Another senator declares that all we are getting in exchange from Russia for Lend-Lease is the privilege of repairing our damaged ships in Russian harbors. We are fighting a common enemy with an ally who is losing six million men and counting billions of dollars in the fight it is only reasonable to see that that ally is doing more than its share. But still we apparently are not satisfied. We want to lend a dollar and get the dollar back with interest with a humble note of thanks. As long as we can send supplies to Russia and lose nothing more than material goods, we say let them go. We'll trade material wealth for the safety of American fighting men any time and in any quantity.

It was hoped that the American senators would while on their trip recognize the deep facts as they relate to human life and future peace. But, alas, they came back home with the dollar mark tied to their thoughts.

An Admiral Advises Fellow Doctors

Labor.
Admiral Ross T. McIntire is surgeon general of the navy and also personal physician to President Roosevelt. Of course, he stands high in the medical profession.

Addressing an audience of physicians at Washington a few days ago, the admiral urged that the doctors themselves "work out some plan that would allow no one to suffer and at the same time preserve the independence of the profession."

He contended that the family physician's fee "doesn't amount to two hoots" in a medical case. The main difficulty is that hospital and laboratory charges are so high as to be beyond the reach of ordinary Americans. He expressed the greatest confidence that if the doctors would approach the subject with open minds, a scheme satisfactory and fair to the profession and its patients could be formulated.

The doctors should heed the admiral's advice. If they don't, "state medicine," or whatever you like to call it, will be put over by a people determined to secure decent medical treatment at a reasonable price.

High Salaries

There appeared recently in public print, a list of high salaries, but, strange as it may seem, the hundreds of thousands of dollars received by some did not occasion a single comment from the commentators. The $75 received by a few common workers has been advertised to the world, the labor-baiters using the lowly figures to create dissension and to paint a picture of something that just ain't.

A feeble defense of the two-, three-, four- and even nine-hundred thousand-dollar salaries was offered by one man who pointed out that taxes entered the picture later. The argument is recognized, but the basic fact remains unchanged; it is far easier to live on $100,000 after taxes than it is to live on $30 a week after taxes.

And it seems that those who have fought increases in the little man's wages are the same guys who have had their salaries increased by the hundreds of thousands.

And to add insult to injury, these same high-salaried guys are the ones who are crying that only a sales tax will save the world.

I assure you that, behind our tears, is a firm resolve to dig in all the harder—and, when victory comes, I will know that my boy did not die in vain.—James L. Mahoney, of South Boston, Mass., in a letter to Democratic Leader McCormack, telling of his son's death in action.

Mr. Bailey And States' Rights

Senator Josiah William Bailey, North Carolina's contribution to the special interests, is taking the stand in defense of his bill to eliminate the fire insurance companies from the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law.

He bases his argument on States' Rights. Possibly States' Rights are involved, but, Mr. Bailey, it is about time to start thinking about the common man's rights.

Mr. Bailey's, and his own record will prove it, come to the aid of States' Rights, the Constitution and Privilege many times when such action was considered contrary and foreign to the rights of the common man. For instance, Mr. Bailey is now advancing under the banner of States' Rights when the fire insurance companies of this nation are charging their policyholders a big billion dollars and returning to them $400 million. No such arrangement can be justified under States' Rights, Big Privilege Rights or any other kind of Rights. And if Mr. Bailey is so interested in States' Rights why doesn't he lead the way and throw light on monopolistic hijacking?

Mr. Bailey should know that North Carolina has no regulatory power over most fire insurance rates, that the people he is supposed to represent are, more or less, at the mercy of the rate fixers.

The bill Mr. Bailey spent long hours studying and linking with States' Rights could be the same one that Senator Burton K. Wheeler refused to introduce. It was apparently too hot for Wheeler, but just to Bailey's liking.

Give the insurance companies their dues, but don't rob the helpless to increase the fabulous wealth of the owners.

The Flying Senators

Completing a 40,000 mile flight to most of the major fighting fronts, five United States senators were upon their return dubbed the "Flying Senators." Now it appears some of them are about to be dubbed the "Lying Senators." Intentionally or unintentionally, some of the group are stirring up the waters without due regard for the consequences. When one says that we have shipped thirty-odd thousands of trucks to Australia he overstates the number by several thousand and ignores the fact that they were ordered there by General MacArthur. When one says the United States is being "sucked" out of its oil, he does not weigh all the facts.

When another says that a base in Siberia would save a million American lives, he does not stop and think that Russia is not at war with Japan, that Russia is entertaining two-thirds of the German hordes is almost certainly saving

Martin County Farmers

Let's All Stay Together As Farmers and Business Men in the Martin County FARM BUREAU

We believe that for the duration of the war prices on farm products will be good, but we remember that after the last war the bottom dropped out and many farmers lost their entire property holdings. We cannot afford to allow the same thing to happen again. Your Farm Bureau is now working to prevent such a catastrophe.

DO YOUR PART--SUPPORT YOUR FARM BUREAU BY JOINING TODAY. The organization needs you. You need it. You have profited from the increased prices it has helped secure. You will profit from its efforts to maintain fair prices during and after the war.
