

State College Answers Timely Farm Question

In making recommendations for lawn grass to be sown in North Carolina, John H. Harris and Roy L. Lovvorn of State College, divide the State into three sections. Extension Circular No. 292 will give you this information. It describes the grasses to be used.

Old Beliefs Are Proved Baseless

Schenectady.—Contrary to popular belief, the ostrich does not stick its head into the sand when frightened or in danger.

Neither does the beaver work all the time "like a beaver," nor does a bull "see red" just because a red cloth is waved in front of it.

These popular myths were exploded here in a General Electric Science Forum address over WGY and WGM by John R. Saunders of New York city, associate curator in the department of public education, American Museum of Natural History.

"We can trace clear back to Roman times the belief that the ostrich, when frightened, sticks its head into the sand," Mr. Saunders pointed out. "Through twenty centuries of time, and in the face of all that is reasonable, millions of people believe this to be true."

"Meanwhile, the ostrich goes about his business, never thinking gives instructions for establishing the lawn, and also gives pointers on lawn maintenance. Just write the Agricultural Editor, State College, Raleigh, if you wish a free copy.

of sticking his head in the sand, living in a land where lions and other predatory animals are ready to accommodate a bird so foolish. The ostrich would, in all probability have disappeared from the earth if it persisted in this supposed behavior every time danger approached. In this case of bird behavior and man's belief, I leave it to you to determine where the foolishness lies.

"The naturalist said that the 'busy beaver' does not work all the time.

"The animal does work, to be sure, and when he does, he works hard," said Mr. Saunders, "but he also loaf and plays, and observers note that he does a great deal of the latter. In addition, the beaver does not use his tail as a trowel, nor does he drive stakes with it, or use it as a sled to carry mud or other materials upon."

With regard to bulls, Mr. Saunders explained that they are color-blind. "In fact, the scientists can find support in the statement of the noted matador, Sidney Franklin, that it is not the color but the motion of the cloth that annoys the bull," the naturalist declared.

"Some experimenters have found that even in the course of a thousand trials the animal is still not able to discriminate between two colors," Mr. Saunders asserted.

Reforest 5 Million Acres, Says Expert

North Carolina has about 4 million acres of woodland that has been poorly cut over and in many cases burned over to a point where there is now only a sparse stand of growing trees. There is also another 1-4 million acres of cleared land that is idle, with much of it badly eroded.

R. W. Graeber of State College, who is in charge of Extension Forestry, says that a good portion of this land should be reclaimed through the planting of trees. As matters now stand, these lands are returning little if any income.

Graeber maintains that a balance should be established between land in cultivation, land in pasture, and land in growing timber. As a general rule, he says that trees should be planted on idle fields not suited for profitable annual crops or for good pasture.

Large openings in the woods, where root competition is not too great, may also be planted. In the Mountains and the upper Piedmont, where woods are open or poorly stocked because of grazing, he suggests underplantings of white pine or Norway spruce.

For general planting, Graeber recommends the spacing of forest trees about 6 by 7 feet. This requires 1,000 trees per acre. In reclaiming gullies, 5 by 6 feet spacing may be advisable.

Farmers desiring information of what tree seedlings are available for planting, what types are best for their farms, and other such information, should contact the county agent.

The number of infant deaths plus still births in North Carolina is 89 per 1,000 births; 74 for the white and 120 for the negro.

More than 2,000,000 men and women were discharged from the armed forces before the end of the war. This is almost one-half the total number mobilized during World War I.

They were directed to their tables by Mrs. W. L. Howell, who passed the tallies. A lovely corsage marked the honoree's place. The home was attractively decorated using fall flowers throughout. Four progressions of bridge were enjoyed by the guests during which soft drinks and cheeses were served. After play, the hostess served a delicious salad plate.

BURROUGHS-COX
Miss Margie Dean Cox, daughter of Mr. A. Cox of Greenville, and Polk P. Burroughs, son of Mrs. Annie Burroughs of Williamston, were united in marriage on October twenty-fifth at 8:30 in a candlelight ceremony in the home of the bride's brother, P. R. Cox, in Greenville. The Rev. Robert S. Boyd of the First Presbyterian Church of Greenville, the bride's pastor, officiated, using the ring ceremony. Miss Evelyn Dennis of Greenville was bridesmaid and Pete Bland of Williamston acted as best man.

The bride wore a tailored suit of blue with black accessories and her corsage was of white roses. After the reception, the couple left for a wedding trip to unannounced points, after which, they will be at home in Greenville. The groom was recently discharged from the Navy.
