'For People Of All Countries . . .'

We plan now for the better world we aim to build.

If that world is to be one in which peace is to prevail, there must be a more abundant life for the masses of the people of all countries. In the words of the Atlantic Charter, we "desire to bring about the fullest collaboration between all nations in the economic field with the object of securing, for all, improved labor standards, economic advancement and social security."

There are so many millions of people in this world who have never been adequately fed and clothed and housed. By undertaking to provide a decent standard of living for these millions, the free peoples of the world can furnish employment to every man and woman who seeks a job.

We are already engaged in surveying the immediate postwar requirements of a world whose economies have been disrupted by war.

We are planning not to provide temporary remedies for the ills of a stricken world; we are planning to achieve permanent cures—to help establish a sounder life.

To attain these goals will be no easy task. Yes, their fulfillment will require "the fullest co-operation between all nations in the economic field." We have learned too well that social problems and economic problems are not separate watertight compartments in the international any more than in the national sphere. In international, as in national affairs, economic policy can no longer be an end in itself. It is merely a means for achieving social objectives.

There must be no place in the postwar world for special privilege for either individuals or nations. Again in the words of the Atlantic Charter: "All states, great or small, victor or vanquished" must have "access, on equal terms, to the trade and to the raw materials of the world which are needed for their economic prosperity."—President Roosevelt, at the White House, Nov. 6, 1941.

The Greatness Of America . . .

By Ruth Taylor

What makes America great? It is not the vastness of the country, nor the fruitfulness of its acres. It is not the hidden wealth of its natural resources, nor the size and variety of its manufacturing plants. It is not its deep harbors, nor its navigable rivers, nor the great arteries of its highways.

What makes America great is its latent power to turn all of those into production for the good of all the people from coast to coast.

The greatness of America depends upon you and me; upon each and every one of us, whether we live on a lonely farm or in the crowded city, whether we live on a tree shaded street in a quiet town, or under the shadow of the great sky scrapers of a bustling metropolis.

As Lyman Abbot once wrote: "A nation is made great, not by its fruitful acres, but by the men who cultivate them; not by its mines, but by the men who work them; not by its railways, but by the men who build and run them. America was a great land when Columbus discovered it; Americans have made of it a great nation."

A country is not greater than its citizens. We are a United States of America because the men of this country decided to put aside sectional and religious differences to work together for the good of the country as a whole. If we want to change our nation, we have the power to do so, by changing the minds of the men and women who comprise the country. If we want to be prosperous, we can, for new wealth can be built only by men. If we want security, we can build it. If we want to eradicate all evil systems and handicaps, we can—for we created them.

America was made great by the men who built it. If it remains great, it will be the doing of you and of me and of all our fellow Americans working together as free men. It is up to us. And we can do it.

The Farmer's Plight

Not so long ago a farmer sold his lands and announced his plans to move to town. Friends, showing a genuine interest, pleaded with him against the move. But the farmer came back and said: "By the time my children were large enough to work they had to go to school, and help was hard to get. When they finished school, the children wouldn't work, and I am through."

Much of the trouble flying loose in this world today is recognized in the farmer's answer. No one is to carry the entire blame for all our troubles, but it is evident that all have contributed to bring about our troubles.

The farmers, not all, to be sure, want to keep their children at home, deny them the right of an education just to add a few dollars to the family income. Unfortunately the demands of our society make it almost imperative to keep the children at home part of the time to help with the farm chores. But even then the immediate advantages gained at the hands of the little laboring tots will stack up small against the handicaps the illiterate will face when they go out in later life and be forced to admit, just as some are admitting today, they can neither read nor write.

The problems faced during the pupil's years in school can be handled in one fashion or another, but the problem presented when the child comes out of school with the idea the world owes him a living is one that is puzzling educators, parents and employers.

Who helped mold the pupil into a being with the idea the world owes him a living without work? It is not for us to say, but it can be pointed out that unless the schools, the parents, and society get together and prove that there is honor in work, that work is a stabilizing factor in one's life, our nation is going to crack under its top-heavy weight.

Political Rat Race

Hertford County Herald
 Now that North Carolina's Democrat-elected senior senator has come out for Robert Taft as the Republican presidential candidate—reasoning that (1) Taft would be the easiest man to lick in the GOP camp and (2) that if elected "he would make the best Republican president we could have."

What type crystal ball is Senator Hoey using these days?

If Taft is the best the Republicans have, then why would he be so easy to beat. And if he is the best and if he is accidentally elected by the support of his senatorial and voting colleagues what kind of President would a man with ten thumbs and both feet in his mouth make in these trying times.

Senator Hoey would have to look a long way and a long time to find any one man guilty of the political crimes on the nation's blotter against this President's son who thinks he can handle a job that his father was never too distinguished in.

OPA's murder, assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill organized labor, secret assault on the nation's farm program and picking the pockets of every housewife in the land. Here is an abbreviated list of the crimes "Rough Robert" has committed in the last few years.

A further look in the political rogue's gallery will find him putting the knife in national defense, social legislation and every other move President Roosevelt ever asked in the name of the common man and common sense.

No Senator, he's your bed fellow so don't try to sell him to those of us who know his voting habits as well as we know yours.

Greed Versus Starving Victims

The liquor interests, after being exposed to terrific pressure finally agreed to suspend operations for two months and divert priceless grain from the manufacture of liquors to the starving in Europe. Even though they shamefully delayed the humane act, the distillers are to be given credit for finally yielding.

But the distillers had hardly more than agreed to check operations before the approximately 10,000 workers in various distilleries warned that they would bring suit to recover their wages during the holiday.

When 10,000 workers can't or won't shift to other jobs to save human life, the world is getting in a mighty bad way. It is bad enough for men to work in a business that offers little or nothing to society, but when men can't agree to alter their individual plans a little bit in the name of suffering humanity it is about time to take stock of conditions and prepare for the worst.

Local Girl Scouts Holding Meetings

On Wednesday, October 22, the Pine Tree Patrol held its regular meeting. The business session consisted of plans for an out-door meeting on November 5. Many scouts handed in material for various badges while others decided on the topic for study in order to obtain our first class badges.

All scouts were present and dues were paid. The meeting was closed with the scout pledge.
