The Right of Self-Restraint
 By Ruth Taylor

There is one civil right which, though it is not mentioned in the Bill of Rights, should nevertheless be numbered among them. It is the right of self-restraint without which the other rights would be valueless.

Have you ever stopped to consider what is implied in our Constitution? It is simply this—the citizens who enjoy its benefits are men and women worthy of its privileges, capable of enjoying its rights because they are mature in thought and trained in the spirit of freedom to show self-restraint.

Democracies flourish only when its adherents practise this right and rite—of self-restraint, when they so conduct their lives that they do not infringe upon the rights of others. In the past when democracies have gone down, they fell because individuals and groups ignored this basic civil right. When they clamored for privileges for themselves, when they ignored the responsibilities of citizenship, they lost their freedom.

Democracy is the most difficult form of government because it is a society of free men, because it does not regiment the minds of its citizens nor legislate their every act. Its laws are the outgrowth of the wishes of the majority for the protection not of themselves alone but of all men.

There is no room for free riders in a democracy. Each citizen has a part to play. The rules under which he lives are of his making. He is not restrained by a master, but restrains himself. And a man who cheats his own laws or seeks to find a way around them—well, he is the kind who would cheat at solitaire. He is hurting himself first of all.

Self-restraint is a sign of maturity. It is one of the insignias of the responsible man, the man who is first of all accountable to his own conscience and to his own ideals of what is right and wrong. It is the direct antithesis of self-indulgence or selfishness—that fault which is the root of so many vices, the key to Pandora's box of troubles.

Self-restraint is a civil right—but it is more than that. It is a civic duty, an obligation which is ours and ours alone. To show restraint in our actions, to consider the rights of others as we expect them to consider ours, to let no untoward act of ours or desire for special privilege hamper the good of the majority, to abide by laws of our own making—that is the duty which we as citizens of a democracy must fulfill.

The Conquered Are Victorious

No brief is held here for persecution, but it is indeed difficult to understand what it's all about when the conquered become victorious.

The loss of life can never be compensated and repayment of the money spent is not to be expected, but some sort of explanation is in order that the program in Germany may be understood.

When General Lucius D. Clay returned from Germany a few weeks ago, he left a land restored to third place in European economic potential. The Germans had traveled from a conquered position in 1945 to hold first place in the eye of ECA, receiving billions of dollars from this country while promising to their conquerors $178 million in external assets and $203 million in industrial plants. Late reports state that the industrial plant promises may be eased and many plants retained.

And yet, General Clay left a people increasingly cynical about democracy. Some of those who aided Hitler were tried and sentenced, while others were retained to carry on business, reports declaring that the old crowd is closely allied with top financiers in New York and London and carrying on the old cartels.

It would seem that the conquered are victorious, that the economic program is freezing peace out of the picture, that something is behind the delay in advancing a formula for lasting peace.

A Hiding Place

The Pentagon Building in Washington, recognized as one of the largest buildings of its type in the world, is used to house the military. It is so large that it not only houses the military but offers a safe hiding place for the unification plan for the services, late reports declare the plan is just about hopelessly lost.

What will You tell the Jury

- when you are sued for damages because of personal injury for which others claim you were to blame?
- Saying you are sorry won't square it. Proving it wasn't your fault may be difficult. Turning the case over to an insurance company to defend and pay for is much easier. You can do just that if you let us write your insurance before the accident happens.

The Story of ZEPHYR Ventilating Awnings

This is a Zephyr Ventilating Awning. It is ventilated over its entire top surface, to help circulate fresh, cooling air into your room, instead of stopping air movement. This ventilating feature is patented, exclusive with ZEPHYR.

And graceful Zephyrs beautify your home. They harmonize with the architecture. Awnings, door heads and porch canopies match in style, come in any color, made of aluminum, or durable aluminum, they last through the years.

Notice that Zephyr Awnings are made of two overlapping layers of Redwood, or aluminum, scientifically spaced. This filters out direct sun glare and heat, bars stormy weather, yet admits light and air. It's patented!

Study this simple drawing. See how the hot air that accumulates under the ceiling is pulled out by Zephyr's ventilating action, while cool air is brought in. Zephyrs can make your rooms as much as 12 degrees cooler, sometimes even more!
