Economy Moves

Smithfield Herald.

When Congress is in session, one hears much about the "economy drive." There is a lot of talk about the need for economy but it's seldom more than talk. And it is not hard to understand why the economy bloc doesn't get far.

The legislators who advocate drastic cuts in federal spending usually are more interested in destroying some public service they don't like than in saving money for the taxpayers. For example, haters of the New Deal clamor for economy when appropriations for public welfare enterprises are up for consideration. But these same leaders don't care if the sky is the limit on federal spending when it comes to financing military projects.

The economy-minded legislator also relaxes his spindles when some "pet project" of his own is before Congress. This was apparent in the Senate's action on the $751,000,000 omnibus rivers, harbors and flood control appropriations bill, which is commonly known as the "pork barrel" because it carries money for local projects.

One is reminded of the attitude of many business executives on the question of a balanced budget and taxes. There is insistence on keeping the income and outgo of federal funds in balance and on reduction of the national debt. But there is no opposition to heavy tax reduction even though it may imperil the government's effort to maintain a balanced budget or curtail the possibilities of reducing the debt.

If there is any lesson to be learned from these actions and attitudes of political and business leaders, it is this:

The people will serve their own interests better if they refuse to be misled by the shoutings for economy and seek to understand what the real motives of the economy shouters are.

Far Eastern Pattern

Lately the western world has been knitting its brows over happenings in the unfamiliar Far East. Several recent items of news from Korea throw light on a pattern which is becoming all too familiar in that same Far East:

(1) There is a wide expectation that aggressive action from Communist-controlled North Korea may be directed before long at the Korean Republic in the South. (2) The Korean Republic has asked for more aid, arms, and a military guidance guarantee from the United States. (3) A revival of nationalism in the republic threatens to establish a state-sponsored equivalent of Japanese Shinto, to the horror of Korean Christians and democrats.

In other words, the United States is asked once again to back reaction against revolution, the discredited past against a tyrannous future. To hold out a guarantee of aid to a government without exacting from it a commitment to reasonably progressive practice would be futile. The United States must somehow contrive to ally itself with the promise of a brighter future for the millions of Asia if it is not to repeat its failure in China. Christian Science Monitor.

Public Aid

Quite a few of the industrial leaders in this nation complain no little about the cost of supporting farm prices, but they say nothing about amounts paid to the air lines, to the shipping interests and others.

Last year payments to the mail lines amounted to $102,157,000. The lines handled 102,000,000 pounds of mail.

It isn't so much what the government gives that counts, but who gets the handout that matters.

Adversity has ever been considered the state in which a man most easily becomes acquainted with himself, then, especially being free from flatterers.—Johnson.
