This Deduction Business

The business of reaching conclusions by deduction is dangerous outside the field of science where the findings can be checked before any harm is done by actual application.

Three women sailors from a Norwegian freighter recently went behind Russia's iron curtain. They declared there were few men in Leningrad, explaining they were not referring to romance. The wolves jumped on the bit of information and by the power of deduction, told the world that Russia had its men in the armed forces while the women were left behind to do the work.

Frankly, we don't know why there are no men in Stalingrad. But if reports coming from the city while it was being attacked and before there was any iron curtain, are true, then many of the men in Stalingrad sacrificed their lives before Hitler's armies. And if a territory in this country equal to that extending from the Mississippi to the Atlantic ocean had been wiped out and had to be rebuilt like the Russian cities, it is likely that women would be handling tasks ordinarily reserved to the men.

Down With It

A magazine beauty clinic goes on to explain how to create a "smiling illusion." We say down with the illusion, and pray for reality for a change. It's admirable to put up a brave front, but let the bravery come from the heart and not come in painted form.

Overlooked

The death of former Senator W. D. Jamieson in Washington a short time ago was almost overlooked in the nation's press, but he will live in his good works for years to come.

Retiring to his law offices, he authorized the "Window Seat" for years, stressing the human values in government, and weighing impartially and fairly the issues of the day. He had that power of deciding what was right and what was wrong, allowing the chips to fall where they would.

With some few exceptions, the press said little about the noble man while devoting column after column to rumors, personal attacks and events of little moment but highly sensational.

It seems sometimes that we help create "bad" men by overlooking the noble men and their good deeds.

Mr. Jamieson well knew that "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches and loving favour than silver and gold." The deeds of such men may not be heralded across the front pages, but their work is necessary to the foundation and future of our nation if it is to survive.

How Much Can It Stand?

Just how much graft and greed can the American government stand?

Reports coming out of the Comptroller General's office are disturbing. Legislation, apparently designed to fit into a gambler's scheme, is disheartening. What the congressional "junketeers" left in their wake in Europe is disgusting. And the trial of a member of Congress for alleged fraud is really revolting.

Communism, rather than forcing itself upon China, was pulled in by a vacuum created by graft, greed and high-handed tactics formulated and followed by that vast country's so-called leaders.

How much graft and greed can be absorbed in this country before foreign isms are sucked in?

Discredited

Possibly it was not intentional, but all the "junketing" by members of Congress discredits the American State Department. It's an even bet that whatever the "royal" visitors learned by their personal visits, they could have learned in direct reports from the countries visited to the State Department.

Of course the reading of documents would have been a dull task, but, frankly, the taxpayers would have preferred it that way. And if the fellow who votes against an appropriation for a project designed to help the people of this country, he should remember his tour at the expense of the taxpayers.
