Bordering On Ignorance

Comment on the recent primary election flowed, in many cases, from sources bordering on ignorance. It certainly did not offer any true enlightenment, and, in the main, it followed the same old patterns or represented the wishes of the commentator rather than the true end, we frankly say, the naked facts.

A friend in Virginia said editorially that the vote was directed against Truman. Closer home, some editors would have us believe that the vote was against Governor Scott.

Still others maintained that it was a vote against Jonathan Daniels. And still others say it was a vote against the "Fair Deal".

Strange as it may seem, few if any said the vote was for Willis Smith.

We say, and there's abundant proof, that Smith won or got the nomination simply and solely because of a deliberately and maliciously misrepresented racial issue.

And then there were those with the raw gall to say that Frank Graham was a great man, a good man, a noble man after they had falsely, knowingly or unknowingly, smeared him with isms and misrepresented the man in every contemptible way. Frankly, it is hard for the sweet little post-primary sayings to change the bitter taste planted before the primary.

And so it goes. Next November North Carolina will vote for Truman in an effort to return him to the White House just to be rebuffed by our selection in the primary, plus, of course, Clyde Rourak Hoey.

How Different It Would Have Been

The conservative element of the Democratic Party in North Carolina with an empty victory tucked under their shirts, are calling upon all Democrats to rally behind the party banner and work for victory in November. There is little doubt but what the call will be heeded, and that ninety-nine and forty-four one-hundredths of those who voted for Frank Graham in the recent primary will stick by the Party in spirit and practice, too.

How different it would have been had the tide turned the other way in the June 24 primary. Judging from past voting records, the party banner would have been trampled into dust by an unholy rush to the Republican ranks.

Action At The Top

There's a sweet little powwow under way in England where the international marketeers are discussing a pact to "stabilize" world markets.

Nothing has been said about the traders meeting there to stabilize the markets. But if action was taken to stabilize production, it would be hailed as a move strictly socialistic.

Possibly the action is necessary, but will planning at the top extend its benefits to the bottom where men, women and children labor in the fields?

Important Elections

The recent primary elections in Florida and North Carolina are taking on more importance in the light of close votes on farm legislation in Congress.

Legislation, calling for an increase of two billions of dollars for farm price support, was passed only after Vice President Barkley voted for it, breaking a 35-all vote.

Silent

The administration has been charged with taling "cold war" to boost claims for additional appropriations at the hands of Congress.

So far the critics have been silent about accusing the administration of taking part in the shooting over in Korea just to alter tax bills and up appropriations.
