Have Parts in Play At College

Two Martin County girls, Misses Bernelle White of Williamston and Johnnie Mae Sawyer of Jamesville have parts in the play "Romeo and Juliet", to be staged at A. C. College next Wednesday and Thursday by the Stage and Script Dramatics Club.

Miss White, a senior, will play Juliet. She has played many parts on the Atlantic Christian College stage, beginning with the role of Mildred in "Ah Wilderness" in her freshman year. She will be remembered for her playing of Viola in "Twelfth Night" and for the original play she wrote and directed last year. She is president of Stage and Script.

Things To Watch For In the Future

Housewives who hate to iron ruffles, lace, and similar frilly items won't find them such a chore with a new stationary ironing device. Instead of moving the iron over the fabric, you move the fabric across the iron. Clean sweep—that's what you'll get with a novel vacuum cleaner rug nozzle. Attached to the vacuum, it acts as a revolving suction brush. Detach it and it becomes a carpet sweeper. . . . Another convenient vacuum innovation is a lightweight (five pounds) hand-type cleaner which even a child can manipulate without difficulty. . . . "Handy" is also the word for a third home cleaning aid: a hand-sized washboard, for laundering fabrics too delicate to toss in the washing machine with other clothes. The "board" (it's plastic) attaches to the hand by means of an elastic band. . . . New globular filler caps now simplify automobile battery servicing. The globes show at a glance whether water is needed, also warn if too much is being used. . . . A sensible looking girl very often is not as sensible as she looks, because a sensible girl has more sense than to look sensible.

State College Tips To the Housewife

For most wool garments, steam pressing is the only way to take out wrinkles, smooth the surface and sharpen creases, our clothing specialists say. The exceptions are woools sold as washable, such as challis, which may be ironed like other laundered clothing, but always with a warm rather than a hot iron—and on the wrong side. Because wool is so sensitive to heat and so easily damaged by scorching, the home pressing job needs to be done with care. If you haven't a steam iron, use an ordinary iron and two clean press cloths, one of wool and one of firm cotton cloth. Or, simpler, use one of the treated press cloths for sale at notion counters and follow directions on the package. It's risky to press a good wool garment with thin cheesecloth, as is often done. The wool may scorch even when the cotton cloth above shows no sign of it.

Steam-press on the wrong side, if wool is likely to shine from pressing, or if the weave has any raised pattern. Right side pressing may be best if wool is thick. Try a little place and see which gives best results.

Be sure to leave a little moisture in, or the wool will look hard and lifeless. This is most important. To steam-press: Cover the wool first with the dry wool press cloth and then with the cotton press cloth dampened in warm water. Instead of ironing back and forth as you do with cotton, press by setting down, then lifting and shifting a warm iron. Press down just enough to force steam through the wool. Lift the press cloths and beat out steam left in wool with your hand or a wood block.

Interesting Bits Of Business in U. S.

Men's shoes, shirts and suits are heading higher. Shoes have been increased 50 cents to $1.50 a pair at wholesale levels, which means larger mark-ups will be noticed shortly in retail windows. . . . The rise in shirt prices by two leading producers ranges from 7 percent to 15 percent. . . . A sensible looking girl very often is not as sensible as she looks, because a sensible girl has more sense than to look sensible.
