

Manhunt Film Is 'High Lonesome'

If not for the persistence of one man, the name of John Barrymore, Jr., might have never become a part of the entertainment world.

The man is George "Dink" Templeton, family friend who succeeded after long urging in winning approval of John's mother for the youth to enter motion pictures.

New screen star John Barrymore, Jr., is cast opposite petite and pretty Lois Butler in his newest film, the Technicolor drama, "High Lonesome," which will open Thursday at the Watts Theatre. The film tells of a thrilling manhunt in the Texas range land.

Templeton, former University of Southern California football star, and co-producer with Alan LeMay of Barrymore's "High Lonesome," Technicolor production due to open Thursday at the Watts Theatre, had watched John grow up and develop the looks and personality, the classic profile, and the instinct for drama of his famous father.

John's mother, former film star Dolores Costello, did not want her son to become an actor. She remembered too well the heartaches and uncertainty of the profession from her own career and that of her late husband. The field of medicine or chemistry looked greener to her for young John.

But when John decided he wanted to be an actor, instead of doctor or chemist, and added his urgings to those of Templeton, the mother gave in.

"High Lonesome" is Barrymore's first starring picture. He is cast as a wandering Texas youth who innocently starts the resurgence of a violent fence war. He is accused of murder and a country-side manhunt takes place when he tries to hide out in the hills.
