Everyone is delighted with the steady decline in the death rate from tuberculosis from approximately 200 per 100,000 in 1900 to less than 30 in 1949.

Unfortunately, the death rate is no longer a true guide to the seriousness of the tuberculosis problem in this country. We must shift our vision from the dead to those who are living and suffering with the disease. The number of living patients has not declined proportionately to the decrease
