No Marks, No Good Teller Says Of Check

Los Angeles.—When a check was presented at a local bank, officials became suspicious that it had been forged. The teller returned it to the store which had cashed it and police found that it had been stolen from a blind woman, Majorie Stewart, by Karl Edwards, 57, who had forged her name on the check and then spent the money for liquor. Miss Stewart always signed her checks and then perforated her signature with three secret Braille characters to make it genuine. The absence of the three characters caused the bank to investigate.

MAKE FIRST FILMS OF LIVING HEART

A HUMAN HEART makes its film debut as motion pictures of the inside of the vital organ in action are shown for the first time at New York's Montefiore Hospital. Produced by a medical research team, the important contribution to scientific knowledge was made possible by the employment of an artificial heart which supplied blood to the body but kept the heart area free from blood while the organ was being studied. At top, a surgeon holds the three cannulas, or tubes, leading from the lungs. At bottom is a close-up of areas surrounding the mitral valve (dark section indicated by arrow), which connects the upper and lower chambers of the organ. White areas are mural and aortic leadlets.
