Two Kinds Of Criticism

John Foster Dulles' imminent withdrawal from the connections he has maintained with the State Department is a natural sequence to ratification of the Japanese treaty.

There have been evidences recently that Mr. Dulles is dissatisfied with the Administration's role in the Far East.

This will constitute one kind of criticism of the Administration. Another kind was illustrated in General MacArthur's speech on Saturday before a joint session of the State Legislature at Jackson, Miss.

Even More Alarming

It is disheartening, to say the least, when a volunteer goes out in the interest of a worthy cause, giving freely of his time and without pay, is asked by the cynic, "What are you getting out of it?"

Such a question under that condition is out of place, but what is even more alarming is the attitude of the volunteer.

Fortunately, the cynics are few, but even a few can do more work for the old devil than ten volunteers can do for all that's good and noble.

It is really alarming when a cynic can and does turn back a person of good intentions. However, most of those who work for the polio, Red Cross, crippled children's and other funds turn back the cynic and carry on the work.

It has happened that the cynic has benefited from the work and efforts of the volunteers and still remain cynical.

Change The Figures

Following World War II much was said about the 52-20 clubs, many charging that the war veterans were sucking every cent possible out of the government.

Findings of a recent survey show that the vets were members of the club no more than twenty weeks, that only one of ten remained in for the full 52 weeks allowed under the law.

A Plague On Both Houses

There's a plague on both the industry and the workers in the steel dispute, for it appears that both sides are looking after their own interests, rightly or wrongly, irrespective of the welfare of the nation.

It has just about reached that point where it makes little difference how much a worker receives. He is always arguing because someone else has a little larger piece of candy.

And as far as being bullheaded, both sides hold a record, with the edge being on the side of industry in recent days.

The western world must symbolize hope and succor to the millions who suffer from appalling poverty throughout Asia and Africa—yes, ultimately in the Soviet Union itself.—Erwin D. Canham
