Age of Choice In Furniture
In Woolard's Store Here

(Starts on page 2, this section)
encourage their designers to think as individuals and resist the temptation to climb aboard the bandwagon of fashionable promotions. Design piracy should be seen for what it is—a dead end street.

Of course opposition to this concept of choice is already active today. We are being told that architecture and architects must be "disciplined"; furniture must be "functional"—that to be "avant garde" one must be impersonal and accept the dictates of an over-all style.

These threats need not deter us as individuals. In the age of choice they will be the cliches of the past quickly forgotten as we assume our right as free individuals to design and choose our furniture and houses.
