The Christian Viewpoint

A friend of college days who is now Chief Psychologist, Central State Hospital, Petersburg, Virginia, has sent me a copy of a paper he read recently before the Virginia Academy of Science and which was published by The National Association of Mental Health, Incorporated. After a long and careful analysis of the evidence the conclusion is: "We believe that there is entirely sufficient evidence, both from clinical findings and from general observations, to support our claim that this fourth category of personality needs does exist; and that this category comprises one single, highly important need—the spiritual, which involves some form of religious faith, whether in a personalized Divine Being or in an impersonal Supreme Power."

"Furthermore, as psychiatry has recognized this need and dealt with its disorders therapeutically, so clinical psychology should also freely admit its existence as a natural personality phenomenon, and treat its deficiencies and distortions as recognized clinical entities. Since, therefore, modern psychotherapy treats the whole "psychobiological" man, if this need be an integral part of man's personality—as, in view of the evidence, we believe that it definitely is—then clinical psychology cannot afford to ignore this part in its attempts to reintegrate the personality of man into its normal, healthy, totally integrated form."

This modern psychiatry, from its study of sick minds, and modern clinical psychology, from its study of basic human needs, agree that for most men, at least, wholeness and health come from building the personality upon a faith in a Supernatural Power.

Of course that is a basic teaching of Christianity. Jesus said to blind Bartimaeus, "Go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole." (Mark 10-52). We need to get ourselves together around something or someone, in whom we can believe and trust. That someone is the God and Father of Our Lord Jesus Christ.—Prepared by Department of Bible, Presbyterian Junior College, Maxton, North Carolina.

Braggarts and Beggars

In the front part of a national magazine the United States Brewers Foundation boasted, apparently with pride, that the brewing industry pays the fifth largest excise tax into the U. S. Treasury.

In the same magazine but nearer the back, Licensed Beverage Industries, in a page advertisement complained about the high tax on beverages. Resorting to begging, the LBI complained that "bootlegging is again a national problem."

The record shows that these two unsavory sources have seldom ever proved beneficial to anyone, that for one to throw away a dollar so his government might gain a few cents in taxes is folly.

When the liquor interests start griping about taxes, they are not thinking about the taxpayer; they are thinking about selling more of their products and boosting their profits.

Minor Problem

Republican Party spokesmen say that the facts simply do not support a depression, and call on the people to rid the nation of fear of an ominous setback.

If the administration only has psychology to deal with, it would seem that the problem is only a minor one and that it could be easily solved.

But before Republican Washington starts practicing psychology, it should explain to the farmer why it is he has to sell a steer intact to buy a choice steak.

Let's Declare a Moratorium!

By Ruth Taylor.

Everyone else is making suggestions as to what we should do—so here is mine!

Let's declare a moratorium. Not on debts nor on obligations. But—let's have a moratorium on careless speech.

Let's declare a moratorium on generalizing. I don't mean we should assume a sob sister attitude about those who mouth hate or seek to subvert our orderly processes of government—but I do mean we should get the facts before we speak—and then use only facts to state our case. Let's not attack or accuse those who disagree with us by attributing to them anything we do not know to be the case.

Let's declare a moratorium on generalizations. We are not a nation of groups, bitterly attacking each other. We are a United States of America—which means a united nation of individuals devoted to high principles. Let's live up to this meaning of Americanism.

Let's declare a moratorium on snide jokes aimed at groups. We can tell jokes on the group from which we come, but let's lay off the others. Let us remember the edicts of good taste and talk about others only as we would want them to talk about us.

Let's declare a moratorium on self-interest. Let us try rather to make no demands for ourselves or our group that will infringe upon the rights of others. Let us strive for the common good that we all may share the benefits of progress.

Let's declare a moratorium on rumors. Let us not pass on suppositions as though they were fact. The enemies of freedom are past masters in the art of starting rumors. Let us not play their game by passing them on, strengthened by our own reputation for truthful speech.

Let's declare a moratorium on mind other people's business—on telling them what we would have done, and what they should do. It's pretty difficult to do more than our own job these days—if we want to do our job well. And this applies to settling the problems of state as well as of our neighbor.

Let's declare a moratorium on talking too big, on boasting of what we know. Maybe we do know a lot—but also it may be just what our enemy wants to know. So why tell everything—just to not big? This is particularly important if we are working in anything that has to do with industry or with government activities—and that means most of us.

You can probably add as many more ideas. How about it? Let's declare a moratorium!

Source Of Mady Troubles

According to reliable statistics, North Carolinians last year spent only one cent out of every dollar for religious and welfare activities. It is a shocking fact, and in that fact lies the source of most of our troubles.

We, as a people, have not only neglected the basic things in our lives, but we have also gone hog wild over the frivolous and questionable things in life.

It is true that about three-fourths of our dollars go for the necessities of life, including food, shelter, clothing and so on. But that other 25 cents is being miserably used for the most part. We are spending four times as much for alcoholic beverages as we spend for religious and welfare activities. Only about one cent out of the dollar goes for education, the figures show.

It isn't the size of our debt that threatens our economy; it is the cause for which debt is created that should cause concern.

Debt, incurred in financing homes and legitimate business, is not to be questioned and it will take care of itself. Debt, incurred to finance questionable ventures and to satisfy whims and unfounded fancies, is threatening our land.

Instead of spending one cent for religious and welfare activities, we could well afford to go in debt, if need be, and spend ten cents or more for those activities. When we alter our spending habits and recognize the basic values in life, we will have remedied many of our problems at their source.

Success

He has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often, and loved much; who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task; who has left the world better than he found it, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem, or a rescued soul; who has never lacked appreciation of earth's beauty or failed to express it; who has always looked for the best in others, and given the best he had; whose life was an inspiration, whose memory, a benediction.—B. A. Standley.

Attend Meeting Of Camp Caroline Group

The Camp Caroline Committee met on the camp site grounds Monday for the purpose of locating the spot and approving the plan for the dining room and kitchen. The dining hall will be sixty five feet long and thirty five feet wide. The kitchen will be on the back side of the dining room and will measure thirty five by thirty feet. Three rest rooms will be constructed adjacent to and behind the dining room and also a room thirteen by ten feet will be built for the canteen. A fourteen foot screened-in porch will run the entire length of the dining room. A screened-in porch will run from the back of the dining room to the canteen, thus making all facilities available under roof. Rev. and Mrs. John L. Goff, members of the committee, attended the meeting.
