Ferguson tractor was next, followed by a new livestock express truck entered by Williamston Packing Company. The Atlantic Coast Line diesel attracted much attention. J. D. McCotter, Williamston's newest business firm, ran two of its large ready-mix concrete trucks in the parade, and Fireman W. B. Gaylord, Jr., brought up the rear with one of the town's fire trucks. Parade Marshal Blue Manning came along in his jeep, his task well done.

Mr. Peanut, sent here by the Planters Nut and Chocolate Company, added the harvest touch to the festival as he strolled up and down the streets.

their ideas to our present day world. We can only learn from them negatively—learning what not to do. The next generation must be vastly different if there is to be any hope for survival of the human race.

"Man is on his way to the final conquest of disease. Now we must accept the reality of a new era; world understanding, tolerance, fore-bearance, have become absolutely essential for the survival of the human race."

Still young, a man of rare maturity, wisdom, experience, strength and foresight, Dr. Brock Chisholm has already made history. He can make more.

Leaf Harvester Gets Attention

The new tobacco harvester that has recently created so much interest in this area is on display at the Farmer Supply Company booth at the Martin County fair. Mr. George Boone of the Long Manufacturing Company in Tarboro is at the fair to explain the machine. The same machine was on display at the N. C. State fair last week and proved to be of great interest.

Also a feature of Farmers Supply Company's booth is the Silent Flame tobacco barn curer of the very latest model. Mr. Bill Dupree, the factory representative, is on hand to demonstrate the curer.

Saturday night after the special entertainment at the fair, the local firm will give away a Silent Flame space heater to some lucky registrant.

Farmers Put 'Eggs In Other Baskets'

Odell and Henry Chandler, Negro farmers of Bejevs Creek, Route 2, in Forsyth County, believe in "putting their eggs of farm security in more than one basket," according to W. N. Knight.

Knight, Negro farm agent for the Agricultural Extension Service, recently assisted the Chandler brothers in securing a tractor for their farm. They had to finance the tractor through a lending agency, says Knight, and the first question the lender asked was, "What do you need with a tractor?"

Knight says the answer given by the Chandlers represents the up-to-date thinking on the part of a good many Forsyth Negro farmers today. The Chandlers explained that they were tired of depending on tobacco alone for cash income. "If something happens, we're out of luck," they explained, that they wanted to convert some of their land into pastures and grazing strips. This would enable them to keep 400-500 layers, a brood sow or two, and maybe a few head of cattle, in addition to raising tobacco.

Henry Chandler summed it up: "Nowadays a farmer cannot depend wholly upon one crop, but must have eggs in two or three baskets so if something happens to one basket he still has two or more others to fall back on and still make a little money. You won't find a single merchant downtown selling just one item; they all sell many."

Knight says that with the tractor the Chandlers will be able to do a lot more work around the farm, which will speed them toward better diversification.

Federal Spending Shows Rise Despite Promises

Spending in the first three months of the current fiscal year, which began on July 1st, totaled $399,000,000 more than in the first quarter of the last fiscal year. This contrasted with predictions the Administration made in August that Federal spending this fiscal year would total $2,000,000,000 less than last year. A large increase in outlays for farm price supports and a sizeable increase in military spending helped push the expenditures to $18,228,000,000, compared with $17,829,000,000 a year before.
