

Plan Expanded Cancer Control

Chapel Hill.—Plans calling for an expanded educational program for cancer control in North Carolina were made when the State Education Committee of the American Cancer Society, N. C. Division, met here this week.

Members of this new committee, in session at the Carolina Inn, recommended initiation of a broad program of information on the lung cancer problem, which was reported to be the most critical in the entire field of cancer.

"If it is not now actually the leading cause of death from cancer, it is reaching toward that position, and if we are unable to influence the present trend, by 1970 it will outnumber all other deaths from cancer combined," the group was shown.

Plans developed by the committee call for a series of training workshops across the State where leaders in county programs may come to learn newest facts about the cancer problem, educational needs, service and research effort in cancer.

Store Peanuts In Coop Warehouses

Peanut producers who assist in developing a more orderly marketing of peanuts by marketing a reasonable percentage of their crop through the facilities of Peanut Growers Cooperative Marketing Association appear to stand an excellent chance of benefiting in several different ways according to William V. Rawlings, president of Peanut Growers Cooperative Marketing Association.

The latest crop report, November 1, 1953, indicates a relatively short production of Virginia type peanuts; 183,250 tons in 1953, compared to 272,025 tons in 1952. Damage due to rains while peanuts were in windrows in the southeast and due to abnormal freezes in the southwest have eliminated a sizable, though undetermined percentage of the production in the other producing areas from edible use. These factors indicate a likely strengthening in the market before the 1954 crop moves to market. Producers who market peanuts through their association will share in any future strengthening of the market as all capital accumulations of the association will be returned to members, while producers who have not maintained any equity in their peanuts will of course not share in any later increase in the market.

General Marshall A Great Patriot

At a recent press conference, President Dwight D. Eisenhower was asked if he would comment on a statement made by a prominent Republican politician about General George C. Marshall, retired. The statement was an unflattering one about the former Army Chief of Staff, Secretary of Defense.

President Eisenhower replied that, in his opinion, General Marshall is extremely proud of the excellent group of warehousemen operating these facilities for producers. The degree to which the potential benefits to producers become a reality depends primarily on the degree to which peanut producers support their marketing association by patronizing it.

shall was one of the great patriots he had known in his life. He also praised Marshall as one of the ablest men and one of the most dedicated men he had ever encountered. He termed Marshall one of the real public servants of our times.

The praise for Marshall came after former President Harry S. Truman likewise expressed his opinion on the elderly general. In view of the fact that Marshall had suffered several incisive political attacks in the last year or two, it is refreshing to hear both the present President, and his predecessor, uniting in high praise for Marshall. No doubt, General Marshall displeased many politicians in his day, since he cared very little for politics, and sometimes evidenced his scorn of political methods. Perhaps, as a result, he has suffered at the hands of some politicians but the President's recent statement makes the position of the White House quite clear.

Rawlings pointed out that association warehouses are now open throughout the area, including South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia and the association is extremely proud of the excellent group of warehousemen operating these facilities for producers. The degree to which the potential benefits to producers become a reality depends primarily on the degree to which peanut producers support their marketing association by patronizing it.

Another benefit of interest and concern to all producers could be that the foregoing would result in an average price to producers of at least 94 and one-half percent of parity and thus make it probable the Secretary would grant an increase in acreage to Virginia type producers in 1954. Present legislation requires the Secretary to increase the acreage allotments for the producers of a particular type or types of peanuts estimated to be in such short supply that they will sell for more than 105 percent of support price (105 per-
