Paying Tribute To Club Leaders

National Home Demonstration Week, which is being observed this week, is a time for paying tribute to volunteer club leaders.

What is a volunteer home demonstration leader? What does she do? She is a club woman giving voluntarily of her time and talents to promote home demonstration.

Today in North Carolina there are subject matter leaders in the 1,800 clubs of the state—foods and nutrition, clothing and food conservation, home management, poultry, gardening, and family relations leaders. These women report at club meetings on latest findings in their specific subject matter field; they may also plan, prepare and present the monthly demonstration.

monstration Clubs, says she thinks of volunteer leaders as topsoil. "As the rain and the sun must filter through the topsoil before reaching the subsoil, so it must be through volunteer leaders that many unreached families will be reached," says Mrs. Graham. "These leaders realize that theirs is a two-way ham. They, as leaders, are growing stronger as they help others. There are also leaders active in furthering the extra home demonstration projects like music, citizenship and international relations, health and safety, and education. All leaders are working to broaden and strengthen their program.
