Only sure way for the merchant to celebrate No. 100 is to leave the car in the corner.

Some of the people who have spent $1,400,000,000 on the army and navy, are the same who have merely thought the people were waiting needlessly excited when they asked for a rough, unpolished diamond.

AMERICAN DYEING

When German dyes were shut off by the war, there was a great outcry that American chemists never could produce anything equally good. During the early part of the war period, many fabrics showed the effect of poor dyeing work. The German selling organizations energetically distributed the propaganda that these were the new American dyes.

As a matter of fact during that period, left over German dyes were principally used, but in view of the interruption of supply had to be employed on materials for which they were not adapted.

The American dye industry is making excellent progress. A large "Drug and Chemical market" has been formed to the front when the Germans will be made by a concerted duty to keep out the American product. The American dye industry is the pioneer in scientific dyeing. They will not fall down in the partnership of technical dyeing.

THE ART OF COLLECTING TIPS

Travelling expenses and the road both increased and decreased by the scientific method of collecting by hotel and restaurant waiters, barbers, and others. The art of collecting tips out of the public.

It is an art which is a high degree of perfection. The general theory is to adopt toward the tipper an air of freezing, coldness and haughty disdain. He must feel that he is a tightwad.

He may believe he is paying a high price for service, and that the management are able to pay a good wage to employees and in all probability do so. Yet he is subjected to the cold and contemptuous stare. Service is slow and incomplete. The waiter or barber refuses to bid him good day when he leaves.

Desiring to treat all men, family and unwilling to do anything mean and stingy in the vicinity of each one pays down his silver merely to secure a pleasant dismissal from the knight of the razor or the dinky wielder of the whisk broom.

For the occasional traveller the price thus exacted is an insignificant part of his living expenses. Still he is irritated by practices that seem so unbusinesslike and which participate of the nature of graft. And for commercial travellers, the trifling habit involves a constant drain of small change. This charge is reckoned among his expenses, and the public pays for it in the price of goods.

On account of the injustice and irritation of this custom, there is a constant growth in no-tip places of all kinds. Many people would rather go to the bother of serving themselves in a restaurant, than worry their heads whether they ought to give tips or not, and subject themselves to insolent treatment from gouging servants.

To prevent a cold take 666. Rub My-Tim, cures bronchitis, colds, burns, sores, letter, etc.
