HARDING'S INCREASED POWERS.

While one committee of congress today is debating whether the president should have larger powers in dealing with strikes, another committee is hesitating to place in the final text of the Fordney-McCumber tariff the grant of wide discretion in raising and lowering duties already voted the executive by each house separately.

It is significant that the subjects of the debate are both, in the larger sense, industrial. "I," wrote de Toqueville in 1834, "the existence of the Union were perpetually threatened, if its chief interests were in daily connection with those of other powerful nations, the executive government would assume an increased importance in proportion to the measures expected of it, and to those which it would execute." Precisely those conditions arising in war, under Polk, Lincoln, McKinley and Wilson, added to the executive power. Some what analogous conditions, due to industrial strife or to trade complications involved in protective tariff, or to both, made Jackson, Cleveland and Roosevelt more powerful than their predecessors had been. Continued nation-wide strikes may give Harding more authority in a time of peace than Wilson had when German U-boats were off Long Island. "Every fresh advance" which a president has made, to quote the recent words of Ogg and Ray, "became a point of departure from which yet more exalted claims to authority were projected."—Richmond Leader.

THE PROFITEERS' TARIFF BILL NOW GOES TO THE ICE BOX UNTIL AFTER ELECTION.

The Fordney-McCumber Profiteers' Tariff Bill, which passed the Senate August 19, will now go to the ice box, according to popular belief, to remain there until after the November elections. In other words, the bill will be in conference, and an idea of what a conference means if he various amendments to the bill are seriously and intelligently discussed by the conference is found in the fact that the senate committee originally made 2,357 amendments to the bill as it came from the house and most of these amendments only further distorted what was originally a most unlovely piece of legislation.

Not satisfied with these original amendments the chairman of the senate finance committee without having previously called a meeting of the committee, brought in 16 amendments four days before the final vote on the bill—amendments which obviously could not be discussed and which only half a dozen senators in the entire body understood.

The pending tariff bill, with amendments, is entitled "A bill to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes." It may be truthfully epitomized as "A bill to prevent Europe from paying us what she owes us, to encourage the higher cost of living, to insure the return of the democratic party to power, and for other purposes."

No tariff bill in the history of the country has been so generally denounced as this one. Every leading and influential republican paper in the country has attacked it, as well as the democratic and independent press. Every spokesman for legitimate business—that is, every business not seeking special privilege through legislation—has opposed it.

The Fair Tariff League, an organization committed to the theory of tariff protection has covered it with ridicule and riddled it with statistical facts.

A Triumph for Value

IN the past two months Firestone has built and marketed more tires than in any similar period in its history.

This steadily increasing public preference is proof of the recognition by car owners of the greater values offered by Firestone. It is a tribute to Firestone men—all stockholders in the company—all actuated by the operating principle of Most Miles per Dollar.

The high average performance of Firestone Cords is without equal in the annals of tire making and is reflected by the general tendency to specify Firestone for hard service. Taxicab and bus lines, buying tires by the mile, are universally equipping with Firestone Cords.

There are many reasons for the high quality of Firestone tires but chief among the special manufacturing processes are double gum-dipping, thus eliminating internal friction by insulating each cord strand, and air-bag cure, insuring a well-balanced and perfectly shaped product.

Don't speculate in tires—you will find the right combination of price and quality in Firestone. Come in and let us tell you about the service these Cords are giving other car-owners whom you know.
