

FALL IN BRAZILIAN EXCHANGE HARMS EXPORTS OF U. S.

(By The Associated Press)

Rio, De Janeiro, Brazil, Nov. 25.—Representatives of American export houses in this city and elsewhere in Brazil are seriously concerned because of the recent declines in the exchange value of the milreis. At a time when importers had reconciled themselves to the fifty per cent reduction in the purchase power of the milreis, as compared to the normal, which prevailed at the close of the world war, and were placing orders for merchandise with increasing confidence, there came the slump in the exchange market. From a trifle more than seven milreis to the dollar, the rate dropped in less than a month to about nine.

Many suspensions of orders with American exporters and some cancellations are being reported, with a complete paralysis of further buying. American exporters, who maintained offices here for nearly three years in the expectation that a trade revival sooner or later would come, are facing new discouragement. Two or three companies have decided to close their Brazilian branches at least temporarily, and it is reported that others are considering similar action.

In the meantime, consular reports on ships' manifests show that competitors of American exporters are making desperate efforts to regain their former foothold in the Brazilian markets—and with pronounced success. British exporters of steel, textiles and some lines of hardware, are making big and regular shipments and are taking increasing orders for immediate or quick delivery. The Belgians and Germans are also making headway in the resumption of trade, although the Germans are reported to be having difficulty in their deliveries.

There are many explanations for the fall in exchange, nearly every interested individual has his pet theory, but the representatives of the American export houses are more interested in signs of recovery, because, until such recovery comes, business will remain in its present state of stagnation.

In the meantime the pessimists predict future gloom, while the optimists are declaring that the slump is only temporary; that Brazil's resources are great, and that recovery is certain.

BIG PICTURE AT THE COLONIAL MONDAY

They all appear in "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow," a new Paramount picture starring Mr. Meighan that will be shown at the Colonial Theatre Monday, November 27th. ### PRESENT ORIENTAL RUGS TO TRINITY

(Special to The Southerner)

Durham, N. C., Nov. 25.—From China, 6,000 miles away, there came today three oriental rugs to complete the furnishings of the parlors at Southgate Memorial Building, woman's dormitory at Trinity College. The mystery, the romance, the symbolism of the East has been woven into the rugs in such a manner as to conserve the oriental effects without the elaborateness of the ordinary tapestries and fabrics produced by the yellow masters. The rugs are the gift of J. A. Thomas, head of the Chinese American Bank of Commerce of Peking, and are valued at $1,000, exclusive of import duties.

The factory in Peking which formerly manufactured all the tapestries and fabrics for the Empress Dowager of China, the lady who was responsible for the Boxer Uprising, made the rugs which have been received at Trinity, and according to special designs prepared by L. M. Jee, a Chinaman learned in the lore of his country, yet a graduate of the University of California and Harvard.

A large rug, 24 1-2 feet long by 22 feet wide, and two small rugs identical in size, 6 feet and 10 inches long by 3 feet and 6 inches wide, made up the shipments. A color scheme of "Chinese Blue" has been carried out to harmonize with the furniture and furnishings.

The design of each of the rugs is the same. The border is woven in a conventional floral design interspersed with butterflies and bats, the former typifying the spirit of love and affection and emblematical of things beautiful, while the latter is the emblem of happiness, good fortune and blessings.

At the four corners are found peony blossoms, growing about a rock, over all of which floats a phoenix. The peony is one of the most beautiful and most highly prized in the Far East. It is used to decorate rare gifts of every description and is also emblematical of love and affection.

In the center is a grand phoenix, surrounded by a border denoting clouds. This mythical bird is called the "Feng Huang" among the Chinese and is an emblem of elegance and benevolence. The Chinese believe it to live in the higher regions of the air descending as a harbinger of good tidings to persons, localities and nations. In the days of monarchy in China under the Manchu Dynasty, it was the emblem of the Empress. The beautiful plumage of the blended colors represents the cardinal virtues.

The rugs are of the very best materials, of first grade yarns and fast dyes throughout. One hundred threads to the lineal foot were used in making the rugs.

J. A. Thomas, who made the gifts, is one of the leading American financiers in China. An interview, accompanied by his picture was recently used by a writer in the Saturday Evening Post on conditions in China.

THE TARBORO MERCHANTS HAVE A BIG BANQUET

Last Night, Forty or More Men Were Present and a Great Address by Mr. Paul Leonard Was Heard. There Was Much Enthusiasm Shown by All Present.

ORGANIZATION IS NEEDED

Two New Members Were Added to the List Last Night, and All Present Promised To Take a New Hold on Their Organization.

Forty or more of the business men and merchants of Tarboro sat down last night to a most elegant dinner served in the dining hall of the Presbyterian Sunday School rooms and enjoyed a most delicious repast from 7:30 o'clock until eight, after which Mr. Peters called the meeting together and explained the purpose, and then introduced Mr. Paul Leonard, the secretary of the State Merchants' Association and the Merchants Mutual Fire Insurance Company.

Mr. Leonard is an interesting speaker and his address was a strong appeal to all the merchants to be loyal to their association in Tarboro.

Before he got into his regular address, he told those merchants present about the attack that had been made in the past few years by the charges of profiteering and high prices but he stated that all these charges were untrue and those who were foremost in making these statements had retracted them since the war had closed.

He told the merchants of the great importance of their sustaining an organization and without any organization their efforts for legislation beneficial to them could never be obtained.

He also told them that he as the State Secretary without a strong organization to back him could not hope to ward off the passage of laws that would work to their detriment to them as business.

He spoke of the improved conditions in business for the last year or more and told his hearers that eastern North Carolina was in much better condition than many places in the far west.

In referring to their organization of the association he reminded those present that before every congress and law making body, nearly every business had formed what is now known as "blobs" and these businesses though their organizations had accomplished much for those concerned.

He said that the average business man of today was asking for a square deal and that the program for the state association now was aggressiveness.

He told them of the legislative program that would be placed before the next legislature, namely: The merchants would ask for a garnishment law to be known as the ten per cent law, and a modification of the Homestead law.

He also stated that something would be attempted to break up the retail system from hotels, by which dealers who come into the town and sell their goods in competition with the local merchant who supports the community and pays his local taxes. In these instances the present laws gave a decided advantage to the itinerant dealer.

He also denounced the Fake Auction system, where travelling men go from town to town and have these auction sales and pay nothing for the privilege in detriment to the local dealer.

He warned the merchants to be aware of what is known as advertising accounts.

He urged the merchants to make more use of their local newspapers and spend more money with these papers. He advised special days during the year in which to present certain goods to the public for sale.

He stated that he had been to many a town and found that the outside papers in many instances had more subscribers than the local paper and the result was that the readers of these outside papers saw more advertisements of merchandise from others towns than from their own, and the result was detrimental to the local merchant.

He said that he was doing all he could in his speeches and trips throughout the state to build up the State and local associations for the benefit not only of the merchants themselves but for the buying public as well.

He presented the claims of the Merchants Mutual Fire Insurance Company organized by the merchants of the state.

The first president of this company was a Tarboro man, Mr. R. B. Peters, who had done as much for this company as any man in the state today, and in proportion to the size of the town, Tarboro had more stock in the company than any other town in North Carolina.

Mr. Leonard concluded his speech at 9:15 o'clock when he was forced to leave to catch the train for Rocky Mount.

Two new members, Rev. Dan Iverson and L. H. Beck were added to the list of the association.

It was decided at this meeting to have a Pay-Up week sometime in December. This matter was left to a committee, W. R. Worsley, Julius Rosenbaum and Lloyd Harrison, the secretary.

Taking it all in all the meeting last night was one that will accomplish much good.

No man could dispute a single word that was said by Mr. Leonard and he was given the best of attention.

His address has stirred up a great interest in the Merchants Association and if his remarks are heeded the Association will go forward in the accomplishment of the very purposes for which it has been organized.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORS—READ

There are no two things in the world alike. The leaves of the forest and the blades of grass in the meadow are all different, one from another. The clouds are constantly changing, and the sea is never the same.

This variety makes the world beautiful and fulfills its purposes. There is a great variety among human beings as among the objects of nature. No two persons are alike. Their abilities vary. This is so far a wise purpose, so their ideals are different. Come and give us you ideal of a better work we can do through C. E. Topic: "Praise God." Time: 6:45—Come! Come!!

THE D. A. R. BENEFIT LAST NIGHT

Those who were at the Colonial last night had an evening of great enjoyment.

The ten dancing girls with their bright costumes caught the audience from the very first. They showed careful training and did beautifully.

The crowd got the biggest laugh from the Minstrel boys, Cosby and Wiggins. Miss Carr's readings and recitations showed splendid elocutionary talent and she greatly delighted the audience.

The male quartette—the Pennington brothers, Bunn and Gilliam, showed up fine in their dress suits with red decorations. Tarboro folks always enjoy male singing and they roundly applauded the singing by this quartette. They were encored several times. On their last appearance they were assisted by the beautiful voice of Mrs. T. J. Farrar.

Mrs. Lagg's voice never sounded better and she was called back again and again.

Our beloved brother, Major John W. Cotton was a director of the orphanage for many years, and the cause of the orphan was very dear to his heart, so let us determine this year to give more liberally than ever, everyone donating at least as much as one day's wages or one day's income.

Make your contributions at once to the chairman of the committee, so that it may be promptly forwarded.

SOUTHERNER SATURDAY SERMON

(By Rev. Bertram E. Brown.)

"And when the Lord saw her, He had compassion on her, and said, weep not."—St. Luke, 7:13.

There are two outstanding features of the life of Jesus Christ, our Lord, which must mark for us also the ruling motive of our lives, if we would please Him and be blessed of Him.

One is that He was without sin, and the other is that He was kind; that is, He was perfectly righteous, and always compassionate.

It requires both of these to compose of Christ-life, and entitle one truly to be called a Christian. Nature can supply a person with one or the other of these qualities, but grace alone can supply both.

For instance, we know many men and women, without any religion to speak of, whose hearts overflow with kindness and charity and pity. But if you will notice closely, you will find that the naturally kind hearted person has no passion for righteousness, but goes on quite contented in whatever particular branch of wickedness it gives him any pleasure to indulge in. While on the other hand we know every upright, honest, clean living people, whose hearts are hard as nails, who probably never felt real, tender pity in their lives.

The true life is therefore one in which, like Jesus, both tenderness of heart and uprightness of life are found. You may by nature be one or the other, and you must seek God's grace for the quality you lack.

Here are some of the objects that moved Jesus to compassion, and ought to move us:

1. People suffering bodily pain.
2. Those with physical disease or affliction.
3. People with disordered minds.
4. People in deep grief.
5. Hungry people.
6. People in jail.
7. Ignorant people.
8. Old people.
9. Very small children.
10. Weak and sinful people who are sorry for their sin.

On various occasions Jesus was moved with pity for one of these ten classes of people.

Now pity is a poor thing without action. We should not take it out in being pitiful, and doing nothing. Some people do, and they are worse than hardhearted people.

You must help by your own personal service when you can, and where that is impossible you must make it possible for somebody else to help.

The Red Cross drive is on now, which means that money is being raised for use among sick and suffering people, in the most practical and efficient ways ever devised in the world. Where you cannot help directly, if you have pity in your heart give what you can to the Red Cross.

Do it Now!—Join the Red Cross and get your button.
