CURRENT COMMENT

An attempt was made on the 13th of this month to assassinate King Alfonso of Spain.

The king was returning on horseback from a review of troops when a man stepped from the sidewalk and seized the horse's bridle, at the same time pointing a revolver at the king.

Alfonso owes his life to his own courage and quick action. Taking in the situation at a glance he dug his spurs into the horse's flanks, which caused the animal to rear violently at the moment the weapon discharged. Instead of hitting the king the bullet buried itself in the animal's neck. The man was instantly seized, but managed to fire two more shots, both of which, in the struggle, missed the king. Alfonso was very cool; he rose in his stirrups, waved his hand and shouted, "It is nothing, gentlemen; I am not hurt." The crowd attempted to lynch the would be assassin, but was prevented by the police.

This was the ninth attempt on the life of King Alfonso within ten years. One attempt, by dynamite, resulted in the death of eleven persons, but the king was unhurt.

Alfonso XIII. began his actual reign in 1902, at the age of 16; but he had been King since his birth.
