Recent Events In World War

try north of the mountains was overrun, now seems a remote possibility.

During the period of time which this review covers it is not the actual fighting that has engaged the world's attention so much as Germany's decree, establishing a war zone about the British Isles and warning neutral vessels that owing to the use of the American flag by British ships neutral vessels would enter this zone at their peril. This is in retaliation for the action of the British in declaring the North Sea military area. In other words, England is attempting to starve out Germany and Germany is retaliating by attempting to starve out England. For the enforcement of her blockade England is relying upon her little battle cruisers and mines while Germany's sole dependence are her submarines. These craft, as readers of this newspaper know, have done England's shipping considerable damage but have not perceptibly checked its activity. Warned by England against passage through the North Sea and by Germans against attempting to go around the southern end of the British Isles, the American shipper finds himself in a most disagreeable dilemma. This government has warned both England and Germany that the United States will hold any nation to strict account for the destruction of American life or American property through the enforcement of the German decree. Moreover, England's attention has been called to her possible responsibility for this decree in her use of the American flag.

The Lusitania which slipped across the Irish Sea under the stars and stripes arrived in New York Saturday. It is a puzzle to a sober landsman why the English skipper sought safety in this ruse for not an officer in the German navy but knows that Uncle Sam has no such merchant ships as the Lusitania.
