SENATOR ROBT. R. REYNOLDS

ADVISES TAR HEELS TO SAVE TRAVEL EXPENSE

SENATOR ROBERT R. REYNOLDS, the State's Junior Senator, in a recent statement published in North Carolina, advises job seekers to save their money, and the trouble of coming to Washington looking for jobs, for about all the jobs have given out, the Senator says. Senator Bob, who is politically astute and has his ear to the ground, knows that the sledding is going to be a little tougher all the time. His ability as a maker of friends has served him well in situations of the true situation as it exists here today.

"Since my return to my office on January 3rd I have made a careful and systematic check of all the agencies of the Federal government in Washington which do not come under the provisions of the classified civil service, and I find at this time that there is absolutely no chance for anyone to obtain government employment here. There is maintained in Washington a Federal replacement service, and those persons who have had government service since August, 1937, are eligible for registration at the replacement bureau, and in the event of vacancies anywhere in the "non-civil service agencies," names from this register are considered. There are so few vacancies, however, that only a fraction of one per cent of the names on the register can even be considered at this time.

"The policy that I have followed in the past in the matter of assisting my constituents in obtaining government employment will of course continue, but so many (an landing jobs for his constituents, but the jobs have given out, and Senator Reynolds says:

"During the last six years thousands and thousands of worthy persons from North Carolina have come to my office in Washington seeking assistance in the matter of securing positions in the government service. It has always been the policy of my office to assist these worthy persons in every way possible, and my efforts and those of my office staff have been responsible for a large number of them getting employment here. However, in view of present conditions I think it only fair that I should apprise my friends and colleagues of 100 persons a day call at my office) are still coming here from North Carolina at considerable expense to themselves, I take this means of acquainting them with the truth of the matter so that they will understand the situation before they come and, therefore, that they may be spared the expense, time, and energy in making a trip to Washington in search of government employment."

THE CIVIL WAR IN CAMP GEORGIA, ROANOKE ISLAND, 1861

CARRIES THE GOSPEL TO SEA COAST VILLAGES

boat, which for the trip had been fitted with sleeping accommodations, stopped over at Tar Landing. Parson Marshall is a good mixer and when the fisherfolks of that community learned that a preacher was a visitor in their midst they insisted upon his holding a service for them. This he did and was delighted with their reaction to his gospel message. Three times more before he returned did he preach informally to people along the inland waterway.

He came home filled with the desire to carry the word of God into these out-of-the-way communities along the coast. In order to be able to devote more time to this work he was forced to give up another charge which he served from Southport, and with it went a good part of his monthly income. Then he set about the business of making a schedule of regular appointments which could be served only by boat.

Fishermen along the coast of North Carolina are poor, but they are shy and proud. Gradually he gained their confidence and each returning trip found larger and larger crowds gathered along the waterfront at his landing places.

And that is the story up to date. The Rev. Marshall has visions of seeing the coastal area of his state divided into three divisions, each to be worked and studied separately. Where there is need of a church, he desires to see one established. With it he hopes to station a settlement worker in order that these people may be given the opportunity of improving their standard of living. But all of this takes time and it takes money, and the person is not making any elaborate plans that require large expenditures.

His constant companion in his journeying is his wife, and the appearance of the couple at each stop for the church boat is a welcomed sight for the natives.

Hampered to some extent by the winter weather, Rev. Marshall now is busy getting his boat in readiness for a program of renewed purpose this spring.

ELECTRICALLY HEATED SOIL

-for quicker, profitable controlled plant growth!

Electricity has become Mother Nature's right hand man—for the truck farmer, the florist, the nurseryman.

Wherever vegetables and flowers are forced, or young plants started—an Electric Soil Heating Cable can render invaluable aid in better control of temperature and growing conditions; by making it possible to market more products more profitably—both in and out of season!

The equipment is simple. You need only a small soil heating cable and a temperature-regulating thermostat. Electric soil heating cable is inexpensive, cheap to operate, and lasts for years.

Ask our Agricultural Engineer for details and facts about this remarkable helper—there's no obligation.
